ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION

President Garfield Shot and Dangerously Wounded

By an Obscure Office Seeker,

Who Fires Two Balls, Both Taking Effect.

FULL PARTICULARS OF THE ATROCITY.

The President for Several Hours Thought to be Dying.

AT LAST ACCOUNTS RESTING WELL, BUT NOT OUT OF DANGER.

How the News was Received Throughout the Country---The Feeling in Portland and Neighboring Cities, etc.

[SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.]

NEW YORK, July 2.—President Garfield was shot twice at the Baltimore and Potomac railroad depot in the city of Washington this morning. No particulars.

LATER.—President Garfield is dying.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—Dr. Bliss says the president's wound is not a mortal one.

Second Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, July 2—10 A. M.—President Garfield is now lying in the private room in the officers' quarters of the Baltimore and Potomac depot. Dr. D. W. Bliss, Surgeon General Barnes and Dr. Purvis (colored) are in attendance. The shooting was done by a slender man five feet seven inches in height. He refuses to give his name. The man was arrested immediately after the firing by some officers in the depot. He was first taken to the police headquarters, but subsequently remanded to the district jail. The shooting occurred in the ladies' room of the depot immediately after the president had entered, walking arm-in-arm with Secretary Blaine. They were on the way to the limited express train, which was about ready to leave. Secretary Blaine, on hearing the pistol shot—two in number—rushed in the direction from which they came, with a view of arresting the assassin. Before reaching the man, however, the secretary returned to the president and found him prostrated. Both shots took effect—one in the right arm and the second just above the right hip and near the kidney. The physicians have probed for the ball unsuccessfully.

Probing for the Ball.

WASHINGTON, July 2, 1 P. M.—An ineffectual effort has just been made to probe for the ball.

The President's Wounds.

The president was shot twice, one ball entered from the rear, and is believed to have passed through the kidneys. The doctors hold out some hope of probable recovery, but it is plain that they feel but little if any hope. One shot went through the arm. The president in talking to a reporter just now said he felt pretty strong considering his wounds, but complained of a tingling sensation in his feet as annoying him more than anything else. The man who shot him wrote his name on a card as "Charles Gitteau, attorney-at-law, Chicago."

The president's friends rushed to him as he fell, and Blaine called for Rockwell. The station agent, Carnay, arrested the assassin, who said, "I did it, I am a stalwart, and Arthur is now president. Take a letter I have here to General Sherman, and he will tell you all about it." The president's wound is said not to be mortal. There is great excitement here.

The Surgeon's Report.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 2, 1:20 P. M.—The president is somewhat restless, but is suffering less pain, pulse 112. Some nausea and vomiting has recently occurred. Considerable hemorrhage has taken place from the wound.

10:50 A. M.—The president is now being conveyed to the executive mansion, under a strong guard of Metropolitan police. Two companies of regulars from Washington barracks have been ordered out to preserve order. Great excitement prevails and the streets are thronged with anxious inquirers eager to learn the condition of the president. The shooting occurred in the presence of some 25 or 30 ladies. There is a rumor that the shooting was done by ex-Consul to Marseilles, Gitteau, who was removed from office. The pistol with which the firing was done is a California weapon with extremely heavy calibre, better known as the "bull dog."

A Little Later.

The president has been made as comfortable as possible in his chamber at the White House, and all persons are excluded from the precincts surrounding the executive mansion. Immense and terribly excited crowds are surrounding the grounds of the White House. Surgeon-General Barnes and Dr. Bliss, with other eminent physicians, are now at the executive mansion holding a consultation, and the people are awaiting the decision with the most intense anxiety.

Third Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, 11:05 A. M.—President Garfield is conscious and does not complain of great suffering. He has just dictated a telegram to his wife. It is impossible to say as yet what the result will be, but surgeons are of the opinion that the wounds are not necessarily fatal.

Dispatch to his Wife.

The following telegram has been sent: "Mrs. Garfield, Elberon, Long Branch: The president wishes me to say to you from him that he has been seriously hurt, how seriously he cannot yet say. He is himself in hopes you will come to him soon. He sends his love to you."

Making an Ante-mortem Statement.

WASHINGTON, July 2—5 P. M.—The president is easier, but his condition is very critical. Mrs. Garfield is expected at 5:45.

CHICAGO, July 2—5 P. M.—Special dispatches say the president is making his ante-mortem statement. His pulse is so rapid it is necessary to use morphine to keep it down.

A Little Easier.

WASHINGTON, July 2—5 P. M.—The president is a little easier, and says he suffers rather less pain just now. His mind continues unclouded, and he converses freely with those around his bedside.

5:20 P. M.—Dr. Bliss says the president is resting more comfortably.

He Cannot Live.

6 P. M.—Colonel Corbin has just come out of the president's chamber, and says he cannot live.

Sudden News.

8 P. M.—The president is very low and is sinking; pulse 150, but conscious. His physicians say he cannot live more than two hours.

Mrs. Garfield arrived an hour ago.

8:25 P. M.—The president is again sinking. There is little if any hope.

Half an Hour Later.

8:50 P. M.—The president is sleeping pleasantly and more comfortably, pulse 158, temperature 99—slightly above—normal respiration, 22 and more regular.

A Better Report.

WASHINGTON, July 2—9:20 P. M.—The president has rallied within the past hour and his symptoms are more favorable. He is sleeping now, and continues brave and cheerful. Before he went to sleep he asked Dr. Bliss, "Doctor, what are the indications?" The doctor replied there was a chance of recovery. The president replied cheerfully, "We will take that chance."

Mrs. Garfield arrived at 6:45.

10:40 P. M. Bulletin.

The president's symptoms continue to grow more favorable, and afford better ground for hope. Absence of blood in discharge from bladder shows that organ is not injured, as had been feared.

11 P. M.—The official bulletin, just issued, says the president is resting quietly and is cheerful. Pulse, 121; temperature, 99; respiration, 20. All symptoms are favorable. D. W. BLISS, M. D.

Midnight Bulletin.

WASHINGTON, July 2—Midnight.—The president's improvement is still maintained. He is resting quietly, and physicians all agree that the last two hours have produced marked favorable change. Respiration, 20; temperature, 98; pulse, 124.

1 o'clock Bulletin.

WASHINGTON, July 3—1 A. M.—Improvement in the president's condition, which began early in the evening, steadily continued up to this hour. His temperature and respiration are now normal. Pulse fallen to 120. The attending physicians regard all his symptoms as favorable, and a more hopeful feeling prevails. D. W. BLISS, M. D.

The Night Watch.

All members of the cabinet remain at the executive mansion throughout the night.

Later Still—More Hopeful.

WASHINGTON, July 3, 2 A. M.—The condition of the president is very much improved. Immediately after the shooting his pulse went down to 55, and his face as he was removed to the White House was of an ashen hue. His pulse has now recovered to 120, and the color returned somewhat to his face. The general symptoms, moreover, are a very considerable improvement. It is not thought wise to make any further attempt at present to withdraw the bullet. It is difficult to determine until a thorough examination, how serious the internal injuries may be. The present indications, however, give good grounds for hoping that the president will rally.

2:30 O'clock Bulletin.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, July 3—2:30 A. M.—The president has been quietly sleeping much of the time since 10 o'clock last night, awakening for a few moments every half hour. He has not vomited since [illegible] and is now taking some [illegible]. Pulse, 120, temperature [illegible], respiration, 18.

The Assassination too Serious to Talk About.

NEW YORK, July 2.—A reporter called at the Fifth Avenue hotel [illegible] after the reception of the news [illegible] to the rooms of Vice-President Arthur and ex-Senator Conkling. Word was [illegible] returned that the subject of the president's assassination was too serious a subject to talk about at a moment, and neither would [illegible] circumstances. The reporter saw [illegible] in the hallway near his room a few minutes after and asked his opinion of the [illegible]. He said, "The news is [illegible] and we are overwhelmed with [illegible] that it has almost stunned me. [illegible] it may not be true. It is the most horrible incident in our history since that of Lincoln's assassination, but if it is true may heaven help the country." Conkling then turned away and went to his room.

FURTHER DETAILS OF THE SHOOTING.

A Woman's Statement.

Mrs. Sarah V. E. White, the lady in charge of the waiting room at the Baltimore depot, was the person who first reached the president after he was shot. She said she saw the whole thing. The man came in from this door (pointing to one at the east) entering the ladies' room from the gents' waiting room just as the president entered the middle door from B street. When he approached within three feet of the president he fired, aiming, as she thought, at the president's heart and missed him. The president did not seem to notice him, but walked right on past the man. He fired again and the president fell. He fell right at the foot of the second row of seats. I was first to reach him, and lifted up his head. The matter rushed in and called the police. I held him until some men [illegible] lifted him up. He did not speak to me or any one until a young man, who I think was his son, came after he had vomited. I think he said something to him when he was lifted upon the mattress. He never spoke while on the ground. No words at all passed between them. The man walked deliberately out at the center door, where somebody headed him off. He turned and started back the way he came and was seized at the door by a policeman. I have seen the man once or twice before; one time in particular I noticed him. A few days ago he promenaded up and down, just as he has done today, wiping his face and apparently excited; thought he was waiting for some friends. This morning he waited here half an hour, walking up and down. There were ten people in the room when the shot was fired. After the shooting the president was laid on the floor until a mattress could be procured, and at once was removed to the room in the second story of the depot. Mr. Garfield's son was with him at the time and as his father fell he burst into a paroxysm of tears. Secretaries Blaine, Hunt and Lincoln and Postmaster General James were at the depot at the time. The waiting room was crowded at the time, both with northern and southern passengers, and when the shot was fired Mr. J. W. Heller of Hampton, Va., was seated with ladies close to the president. He heard the whizzing of the ball uncomfortably close to him. At the time of the first shot the assassin was not over seven to eight feet from him. Mr. Garfield when he fell turned deadly pale, and soon after he was carried up stairs, he vomited.

Another Continuous Account.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—This morning witnessed a scene unparalleled in the history of the country. The assassination of Lincoln, coming as it did, at the close of a long and desperate war, and as the last expiring throe of that war—born in hate and passion—was an infinitely more logical event than this horror. A dumb horror seems to have taken possession of every body, and few appear to realize the present situation, much less to forecast the future. A great crowd gathered almost instantly around the Baltimore and Potomac depot in which the President was shot. A hundred different and conflicting stories of the manner of the shooting and of its effect spread like wildfire throughout the city. By common consent business was suspended in the shops and stores as well as in the public offices, and the population of Washington emptied itself into the streets and gathered at every corner to listen to the newest tales told of the tragedy. An account of the shooting given by Secretary Blaine to Judge Shellabarger this afternoon is probably as accurate as any that can be obtained.

The president and Mr. Blaine rode to the depot this morning in a carriage together. Mr. Blaine says that President Garfield was in an unusually joyous mood and several times expressed his keen gratification that the relations between himself and the members of his cabinet were so harmonious, and that the administration was a unit. When the carriage arrived in front of the depot the president and Mr. Blaine left it and entered the ladies' waiting room, through which they passed arm in arm. Mr. Blaine says he dropped the president's arm as they were passing through the door into the main room at which instant two shots were fired. Mr. Blaine saw a man running and started towards him, but turned almost immediately and saw that the president had fallen. [illegible] president. He sprang towards him, assisted several others and raised his head from the floor. As the president fell he exclaimed "My God!" At that time Postmaster General James, Secretary Windom, Secretary Lincoln, who had arrived earlier at the train, were promenading on [illegible]. General James says that Colonel Jameson of the postoffice department [illegible] of the depot immediately after the shots were fired and exclaimed "The president is shot." Either the secretary or another gentleman of the party exclaimed, "Oh, nonsense!" Col. Jameson said "I saw it." The party then rushed in and found Blaine, who had started to [illegible] man, bending over the president and keeping the people back. Physicians were sent for and Drs. Bliss, [illegible] were soon in attendance. The president was removed to a room in the second story and a [illegible] examination of his wound was made, but the ball, which had entered the right side of his back, near the spinal column and immediately over the hip bone, could not be found, although its course was traced for about three inches.

As soon as he fired the shot the assassin was seized by Officer Carney and immediately hurried away to police headquarters. This was fortunate for him, for as soon as the depot crowd ascertained that the murderer was in custody, there was talk of lynching him, and if the excited crowd could have laid hands on him, his fate would have been a sudden and tragic one.

Guitteau was locked up and physicians summoned. On the arrival of the prisoner at the headquarters he was at once locked up, and word having been sent in every direction for physicians, Dr. Townsend, health officer, responded, and subsequently Dr. J. H. Baxter of the army, Dr. Pell of the navy and Dr. D. W. Bliss responded. Guitteau did not throw the pistol away, but had it in his hand when arrested. The crowd outside the depot seemed at a loss whether to go to police headquarters and lynch the party, but about 9:45 word came out of the room into which the president was taken that the wound on the body was not necessarily fatal, but that the ball could not be probed for until after, and that one ball had wounded him in the right arm just below the shoulder. This seemed to relieve the crowd somewhat, and while it became more and more dense, it quietly awaited further news.

At about ten o'clock A. M. the chief of police, having, after consultation with Gen. Sherman, ordered out a large detail of the police force, a police ambulance was driven to the front door of the depot. The president appeared to be sleeping and was deathly pale. Just as he was placed in the ambulance he opened his eyes. The streets in the neighborhood of the depot were thronged with people, as also was the avenue. Everything was very quiet. As the president was being placed in the ambulance somebody called out, "Hurrah for the man who shot him," but the indignant crowd could not discover the guilty person.

Still Another Account.

NEW YORK, July 3.—Simon Galacho, Minister to this country from Venezuela, who resides here, was present in the depot at Washington to-day when President Garfield was shot by Chas. Guitteau, and arrived this afternoon. He gives the following account of the attempted assassination of the president: I was in Washington looking after the interests of Venezuela. I had made arrangements to visit New York this morning, in company with four lady friends, members of my family. I was to meet them at the Baltimore and Potomac railroad depot at 9:15 A. M. A few moments after 9 o'clock I alighted from my carriage and entered the station. After purchasing my ticket I walked leisurely about the depot when presently I saw a carriage drive up and two gentlemen alight therefrom. I took little notice of them at first, but in a minute I observed that the two men were President Garfield and Secretary Blaine. The president and secretary stood beside the carriage and conversed together for some minutes, when they walked into the depot. As they entered the depot, the president and secretary both bowed to me. I had just raised my hat and was about turning around for the appearance of my lady friends when suddenly I heard the report of a revolver. Quickly I wheeled around, and before me I beheld the staggering form of the president of the United States. I also saw the would-be assassin within a few feet of the president. He had a revolver in his right hand. His knees were slightly bent. He took two or three hasty steps towards the president and fired again. The first ball took effect in the president's right side, and the second one struck him in the back. When the second shot was fired the president fell to the floor. The would-be assassin, seeing Gen. Garfield fall, turned and attempted to escape by the street entrance. I hurried toward that door, and when the villain saw that I intended to head him off he turned and ran towards the opposite door, where he was caught by a number of employes in the depot.

When the president was shot and when he fell he spoke not a word, nor did the would-be murderer. It was quickly noised about the depot that the president had been shot, and the doors of the depot were at once closed in order to prevent the crowd from rushing in. When Secretary Blaine heard the report of the revolver he sprang towards the door, but when he realized that the president had been shot he immediately ran to his assistance.

Statement of an Eye Witness.

A gentleman who was an eye witness of the attempted assassination gives the following statement of the occurrence: I was coming down Pennsylvania avenue when I saw a carriage coming up the avenue, the horses running so fast I thought they were running away. As the carriage arrived in front of me a man put his head out of the window and said, "Faster." After hearing this remark I thought there was something wrong, and ran after the carriage. When it reached the depot the man jumped out and entered the ladies' room. He had not been there more than three minutes when President Garfield arrived, stepped out of his carriage and entered the ladies' room. The president, after passing through the door, was just turning the corner of a seat, when the assassin, who was standing on the left of the door, fired. The ball struck the president in the back, and he fell forward. I ran into the room, and just then the man fired again, while the president was falling. The moment the president fell a policeman who had been standing at the depot door keeping the way clear for the president and his party, grabbed the assassin by the neck and as he pulled him out of the depot another policeman came to his assistance. Just prior to the shot the assassin exclaimed, "I have killed Garfield. Arthur is president. I am a stalwart." While the president was lying on the floor in the ladies' room he was surrounded by Secretaries Windom, James and Blaine, Mrs. Hunt, Miss Windom and Mrs. James, who were standing near the president. In three or five minutes after the shooting Dr. Bliss arrived. The president was then put in bed and carried up stairs, where an examination was made by the doctors. General Sherman then came and called an ambulance to carry the President to the White House.

A spectator thus describes the removal of the president to the White House: "The president lay in the ambulance propped up with pillows and with his right arm thrown over his head. His face was ashy white but bore a calm placid look. He seemed perfectly conscious and opened his eyes frequently to view the surroundings. While he was being carried up stairs he [illegible]."

Another Account.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—The president [illegible] Mrs. White, who was in the ladies' waiting room, rushed to the president and raised his head. Blaine also rushed to assist the president. The assassin ran out B street, but Captain Parks, ticket agent, jumped through the window and grabbed the assassin, who made no resistance. Officer Carney, depot policeman, first came up and took hold of the assassin, who made no resistance, and immediately Officer Scott also took hold of him. Parks let the officers have him and turned his attention to the president. The president was taken up stairs. He said not a word until he was laid down, when he asked that his shoes be taken off, saying he felt pain in his feet. As soon as his boots were removed he said to Secretary Windom: "Go right now and send a telegram to Mrs. Garfield, saying I feel considerably better, and if she feels well enough tell her to come to Washington immediately." This dispatch was sent and was sent from Washington at once to Long Branch to Mrs. Garfield.

Secretary Blaine's Account.

Secretary Blaine was not going with the party but went down to bid the president good bye. He said: "The president and I were walking arm in arm towards the train. I heard two shots and saw the man run. I started after him, but seeing he was grabbed just as he got out of the room, I came to the president and found him lying on the floor. The floor was covered with the president's blood. A number of people gathered around shortly afterwards and have some of that blood on their persons. I think I know the man. I think his name is [illegible]. The weapon used was a revolver seven inches long. It had an ivory handle and is very large. It's what is known as a California pistol. It made a loud report."

Parkes says both shots were fired while the assassin was behind the president.

A Statement from Secretary Blaine.

WASHINGTON, 2:30 P. M.—The president went this morning to the Baltimore & Potomac station at about twenty minutes past 9, intending, with a portion of his cabinet, to leave on the limited express for New York. I rode in the carriage with him to the executive mansion and was walking by his side when he was shot. The assassin was immediately arrested, and the president was conveyed to a private room in the station building, and surgical aid at once summoned. He has now, after twenty minutes, been removed to the executive mansion. The surgeons in consultation regard his wounds as very serious, though not necessarily fatal, as his vigorous health gives strong hopes for his recovery. He has not lost consciousness for a moment. Inform our ministers in Europe.

Secretary of State.

The President's Relations.

CLEVELAND, O., July 2.—The messenger who went down to Solon this afternoon, where the president's mother and two sisters live, says the first news received there was from newspaper extras [illegible] train. WASHINGTON, July 2.
Hon. C. A. Arthur, Vice-President, New York:
At this hour, [illegible] P. M., the president's symptoms are not reassuring, [illegible] can be given until after probing the wound at 3 o'clock. There are strong grounds for hope, and at the same time the greatest anxiety is felt as to the final result.

At this hour, half-past three, the symptoms of the president are not favorable. Anxiety deepens.

Arthur to Blaine.

NEW YORK, July 2.
To Hon. Jas. G. Blaine, Secretary of State:—Your telegram, with its deplorable narration, did not reach me promptly, owing to my absence. I am profoundly shocked at the dreadful news. The hopes you express relieve somewhat the horror of the first announcement. I wait for further intelligence with the greatest anxiety. Express to the president and those about him my great grief and sympathy, in which the whole American people will join.
C. A. ARTHUR.

NEW YORK, July 3.—Blaine, Secretary of State, Washington:—Your 6:45 telegram is very depressing. I still hope for more favorable tidings, and ask you to keep me advised. Please do not fail to express to Mrs. Garfield my great sympathy.
C. A. ARTHUR.

The Feeling of a Friend.

COLUMBUS, July 3.—Governor Foster says: It is with very great difficulty I can realize that the president is near his end. In the past four days I have spent a good share of my time with him. The most depressing thought to me lies in the fact that such a thing as assassination of presidents should occur. It seems the work of a monomaniac. If the president should die I have every reason to believe that President Arthur would prove himself a safe president and an intelligent administrator of public affairs.

Telegram from General Grant.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—The following dispatch is received by Secretary Lincoln from General Grant:

ELBERON, New Jersey.
To Secretary Lincoln, Washington:—Please dispatch me the condition of the president. News received conflicts. I hope the most favorable may be confirmed. Express to the president my deep sympathy and hope that he may speedily recover.

Telegram from Gen. Hancock.

GOVERNOR'S ISLAND, July 2, 1881.
To Gen. W. T. Sherman, Washington: I trust that the result of the assault upon the life of the president to-day may not have fatal consequences, and that in the interest of the country the act may be shown to be that of a madman. Thanks for your dispatch and for your promise of further information.
W. S. HANCOCK.

Sympathy from Abroad.

The secretary of state has received the following from the governor-general of Canada:

AMHERST, N. S., July 2.—Pray express my warmest sympathy with the president and his family at the dastardly attempt on his life. I am shocked at the news, but trust the wound is not mortal. I shall be very glad of further intelligence. Reply to Halifax.
(Signed), LORNE, Governor-General.

Sympathy from the Queen.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—The following cable message was received this morning by the British minister:

WINDSOR CASTLE, July 3.
The queen is most anxious to learn as to the state of the president. Please wire the latest news.
SIR H. PONSONBY.

The News in London.

LONDON, July 3.—There is profound sensation here, with amazement and incredulity. Great anxiety is felt, especially among Americans, who deserted their places and occupations to get news. Minister Lowell's residence was thronged. The queen and Earl Granville immediately and personally cabled their condolence. The Observer prints a special edition Sunday morning. It says: The first impression is that the dastardly act is due to the same agencies as have attempted the lives of so many crowned heads, but there is no evidence of political crime. It seems to have been the act of a half-crazed lunatic. Regicide is an intelligible crime, but to kill one president to make room for another is an act of folly that no sane man would perform.

MRS. GARFIELD'S ARRIVAL.

A Sad and Touching Scene.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—Just before Mrs. Garfield's arrival and while she was expected, Secretary Robert Lincoln was pacing the floor of the president's library with a downcast air, evidently recalling the scene of the sad tragedy of sixteen years ago. As the time approached at which Mrs. Garfield was expected a sorrowful group gathered on the south portico of the White House to receive her. A few minutes before seven o'clock she arrived and was met at the front door by Attorney General MacVeagh, Mr. P. M. Gen. James and Mrs. Garfield's eldest son. He carried [illegible] her into the house, sobbing. Strong men who witnessed this sad scene could not turn away and wept as they heard the heartbroken sobs of the president's wife. Mrs. Garfield was immediately taken to the bedside of her husband, who greeted her with affectionate cheerfulness. The scene that followed was indescribable. The presence of Mrs. Garfield seemed to cheer her husband and the favorable turn in his condition observed within an hour after her arrival was attributed by the physicians to that fact. The president's pulse, which had been for some time at 140 ran down to 128, and soon afterwards to 112. At 9:40 he was reported to be sleeping quietly and Mrs. Garfield felt considerably encouraged, although physicians shook their heads and maintained the opinion that the case was hopeless.

THE PRESIDENT'S CONDITION

Very Considerably Improved!

STRONG HOPES OF HIS ULTIMATE RECOVERY.

The President enjoys Sound Sleep, his temperature and respiration are normal, and he Talks Cheerfully.

[SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.]

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, July 3.—The following bulletin has just been issued by the president's attending physicians:

7 A. M.—The president's rest has been refreshing during the night, and only broken at intervals of about an hour by [illegible] to take a little nourishment. [illegible] thirst, which has been constant [illegible] fortitude.

WASHINGTON, July 3—9 A. M.—The president's condition now more favorable. Physicians will this morning seek to [illegible] the course of the bullet.

10 A. M.—The result of consultation of physicians is that symptoms are more favorable than at any time since the shooting. Pulse 108. No attempt has been made to get the bullet, as physicians think it has lodged where it will not necessarily interfere with the ultimate recovery of the president.

11 A. M. Bulletin.

WASHINGTON, July 3—11 A. M.—The president's condition is greatly improved. He secured sufficient refreshing sleep, and during his waking hours is cheerful and inclined to discuss pleasant topics. Pulse 106, with more full and soft expression; temperature and respiration normal.

The Direction of the Bullet.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—Dr. Bliss states this morning that examination was made yesterday afternoon and evening, disclosing the fact that the bullet entered the president's body between the tenth and eleventh ribs on the right side of the spinal column, and passing forward and downward into and through the lower end of the right lobe of the liver and finally lodged in the anterior portion of the abdomen.

A Very Bad Wound.

WASHINGTON, July 3, 12 M.—Examination discloses the fact that the ball entered the president's body between the tenth and eleventh ribs and lodged either in the right lobe of [illegible] the anterior walls of the abdomen, and in the opinion of the attending physicians was not necessarily fatal. At this hour the physicians say the improvement in the president's condition, which commenced soon after the arrival of Mrs. Garfield, has continued steadily up to the present hour. He sleeps quietly at intervals and the attending physicians are hopeful that he may be saved.

NEW YORK, July 3.—The Post's Washington special says: The first ball aimed at the president entered immediately above the kidneys on the left side. The president, stunned by the shock, [illegible] turned about when the villain shot a second time, the bullet striking in front of the shoulder and passing out beneath the shoulder blade. Those who stood immediately around the assassin and the president say that the man shouted in a frantic tone, "I am a stalwart. It had to be done. Arthur will now be president."

The Wound not to be Probed.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—The advisability of probing the president's wound for the bullet was carefully considered at a consultation of the attending physicians at 7 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and it was then determined not to make any attempt to extract the ball, owing to the fact that the [illegible]

Why the Wound is not Probed.

[illegible]

Opinion of the Wound.

[illegible] that the ball entered the [illegible] after striking vital parts [illegible] organ.

The Seats of Pain.

The president [illegible] complained of pains in the ankles [illegible] which indicated that the ball entered the [illegible] of the stomach, but the pains have subsided [illegible] to the spinal column. The doctors are [illegible] doubtful, and fear the chances are against the president.

The Murder of Blaine Sought.

Benson, [illegible] of secret service, who happened to be standing near, heard the shot, rushed to the assassin, and just as he was about to raise the pistol with three chambers still loaded, to shoot Blaine, it is thought, throttled him and threw him to the ground.

The Weapon.

The pistol found in the assassin's hand is a murderous looking weapon. It was a five-chambered heavy navy revolver, of 44 calibre. It makes a hole as large as a musket ball. The balls remaining in it were designed for self-defence, or as some think, for Blaine. Those who stood near say that Guitteau made a movement when stricken down as if to shoot Blaine. The latter was very calm and collected, but intensely pale.

The Doctors' Call.

Doctors were summoned by telephone and telegraph, and Dr. Bliss speedily appeared upon the scene. There soon followed him a score of the most prominent physicians in the city. Dr. Bliss at first said, "It is a safe wound." After he had watched the president for a few moments he said with great thoughtfulness, "It is not a necessarily mortal wound." After that Col. Robert Ingersoll was admitted to the room. The president stretched out his hand, and in a voice not strong said, "I am glad you have come." Col. Ingersoll said, "Are you in pain?" The president answered, "I feel a pricking sensation in my feet." One of the physicians said that a pricking sensation was not a good symptom.

THE LATEST BULLETINS.

Sunday, 5 o'clock P. M.

President asleep. Discharges from bowels and bladder are without indications of blood. Temperature and breathing natural. Pulse 104. Condition continues to improve.

6 o'clock P. M.

The president sleeps well at intervals. Pulse 109. Temperature and breathing natural.

9:15 P. M.

Surgeons say the symptoms continue favorable, that every hour this status continues lessens the danger.

11 o'clock P. M.

The president continues to improve slowly. The physicians' hopes are strong. No inflammation yet. Weather very favorable—cool and fresh. Dr. Bliss telegraphed: "The president has slept a good deal since last bulletin, though occasionally suffering from pain in both feet and ankles. Pulse 108, respiration 18, temperature nearly normal. Whilst the president is by no means out of danger, yet the symptoms continue favorable."

July 4, 12:30 o'clock A. M.

Dr. Bliss, in private conversation at 12:30 said the condition of the president was admirable and chances for recovery splendid.

July 4, 12:45 A. M.

Dr. Bliss reports the president as steadily improving. Any rumor to the effect that inflammation has set in is incorrect.

July 4, 1 A. M.

In view of the fact that it is deemed best to keep the president perfectly quiet during the remainder of the night, the attending physicians announce at 1 A. M. that no examinations will be made and no further bulletins issued until 7 A. M.

Sunday's Telegrams from Secretary Blaine.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—Gov. Cornell this morning telegraphed: "The joyful news is received with reverent thankfulness." Secretary Blaine telegraphs Robertson: "We grow more and more encouraged as to the final result, though still most deeply anxious. The president's condition has steadily improved since last night. Now 1 P. M. he is doing as well as the physicians could possibly hope for. He has never lost consciousness or courage for one moment, and awaits the issue with more coolness than his friends." To Cornell he telegraphs: "The president returns sincere thanks for your words expressions of sympathy. He faces death with the calmness of the bravest courage."

Dispatches from Gen. Sherman and Others.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 3, 7 P. M.—Following copies of dispatches received by Gen. McDowell are furnished [illegible].

WASHINGTON, July 3.—Received 1 P. M.
To Gen. McDowell, San Francisco:—Dispatch received. Just this minute back from the White House. Dr. Bliss, the surgeon in attendance on President Garfield, authorizes me to report that all the symptoms are [illegible] favorable, and that he believes in ultimate recovery.
W. T. SHERMAN.

Proclamation by Gov. Foster.

COLUMBUS, O., July 3.—Gov. Foster to-day issued a proclamation that, in accordance with numerous suggestions that accord with his feelings in the matter, he advises various cities to suspend the usual 4th of July celebrations and substitute appropriate services in churches at 10:30 o'clock and engage in prayer to Almighty God, and that the celebration be conducted in accordance with what may then be known of the condition of the president. Thanks to kind providence, it is a great joy to add that present advices give hope of recovery.

CHARLES GUITTEAU.

The Man as Infamous as Wilkes Booth.

THE MISCREANT WHO ATTEMPTED TO MURDER THE PRESIDENT.

What is Known of the Man who did the Awful Deed. His Statement of his Motives. He Claims to be a Stalwart of the Stalwarts.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—Charles Guitteau, the would-be assassin, is a stranger by birth, and has been a very persistent applicant for a consular position. He has haunted the executive mansion for several weeks and the [illegible]

The Assassin's Boast.

After the shooting and after Scott and Carney got hold of the assassin and were taking him to police headquarters he said voluntarily to them: "I did it and will go to jail for it. I am a stalwart and Arthur will be president." He had a letter in his hand and wanted the officers to take it to Gen. Sherman, saying it would be all right. The prisoner made no resistance, saying he had contemplated killing the president and it was for the good of the country. About 9 o'clock this morning the assassin went to a hack stand adjoining the station and engaged a hack. He told the driver he wanted to go to Greenwood cemetery in a short time, and wanted to be driven very fast when he should get into the hack, and agreed to pay [illegible] for the hack on condition that the hackman would drive fast. When stopped the assassin was going to the hack he had engaged and he insisted that it was important for him to go and deliver a message to Gen. Sherman, and when the officers refused to let him go he begged them to take the letter he had for Gen. Sherman, of which the following is a copy:

WHITE HOUSE, July 2.
The president's death was a political necessity, but it will unite the republican party and save the republic. Life is a flimsy dream, and it matters little when one goes. A human life is of small value. During the war thousands of brave boys went down without a tear. I presume the president was a Christian and that he will be happier in paradise than here. It will be no worse for Mrs. Garfield, dear soul, to part with her husband this way than by natural death. He is liable to go at any time.

The papers referred to in the letter to Gen. Sherman have not yet been given out for publication. Byron Andrews, who is the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, says that while it is true that a package of papers are in the hands of the police, accompanied by a note addressed to him (Andrews) he was no personal acquaintance of Guitteau and never heard of him before until this morning. The following letter was found on the streets shortly after Guitteau's arrest in an envelope unsealed and addressed, "Please deliver at once to General Sherman or his first assistant in charge of the war department":

TO GENERAL SHERMAN: I have just shot the president. I shot him several times, as I wished him to go as easily as possible. I am a lawyer, theologian, and politician, and a stalwart of the stalwarts. I was with General Grant and the rest of our men in New York during the canvass. I am going to jail.
Yours respectfully, CHARLES GUITTEAU.

On receiving the above General Sherman gave it the following endorsement:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
WASHINGTON, July 2, 1881, 11:15 A. M.
This letter was handed to me this moment by Major William [illegible] Twining, U. S. engineers, commissioner of District of Columbia, and Major Brock, [illegible] and chief of police. I don't know the writer, never heard of or saw him to my knowledge, and hereby return it to the keeping of the above named parties as testimony in the case.
W. T. SHERMAN, General.

Guitteau in Jail.

[illegible]

A Shyster Lawyer, a Religious Fraud and a Boarding-house Beat.

[illegible] the man was crazy. Three weeks ago he met Mrs. Lockwood, of Mrs. Lockwood's boarding-house, and requested her not to say anything about the bill he owes, as it would hurt him in his efforts to secure a position. Mrs. Lockwood says that Guitteau was a great bother to General Logan, so persistent was he in his own efforts to secure that gentleman's efforts in his behalf. Since leaving Mrs. Lockwood's house he has been stopping at various places, never at any any great length of time, for the reason that he appeared to have no friends. He told one of the boarders at Mrs. Lockwood's he expected to be appointed minister to France, but did not desire it known. Up to day before yesterday, when he registered at the Riggs House, Guitteau has been stopping for the past three weeks, with no baggage but a paper box, at 923 Fourteenth street.

GUITTEAU'S CAREER IN MILWAUKEE.

A gentleman who knew Guitteau says: During the winter of 1878-79 he had a desk in my office in this city and attempted to practice law here. He had but little business and seemed very poor, and though it was winter he went about with only a thin summer coat on. He is not a foreigner as reported, but I think was of French descent. I used to regard him as a little insane. He had some theory in regard to the Hebrew meaning of the Bible, and claimed it was not generally understood aright. Sometimes he would sit a whole day in the office and read the bible, and when I entered the office I sometimes found him on his knees in prayer. He also published some pamphlets on religious subjects, which were kept for sale at book stores. He was a great deal at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, and took part in the weekly prayer meetings there. I regarded him as a harmless fellow, but very eccentric. He had some business here after he left the city and wrote to [illegible] to call for him occasionally in regard to matters they had entrusted to him. Among those who knew Guitteau is Judge Mallory, in whose court he had practiced for some time. The judge stated that he was a swarthy, ill-natured looking fellow, who certainly was not entirely sane. In the municipal court it was stated he was known as the defender of vile women, and never was known to have a respectable client. He was in every sense a pettifogger. A reporter was shown his attorney's card and following is a reproduction of it: "Charles J. Guitteau, lawyer, No. 296 Broadway, Milwaukee, Wis. Successful attention given to every kind of bar business. Ten years practice in New York and Chicago." Another person who knew him while here was Adolph Herlenden, practicing attorney. He described him as a dark and swarthy looking individual who was evidently troubled with hypochondria and was full of odd manner. [illegible] concerning every imaginable subject. While here he was busy a portion of the time writing a book on morals. His mind evidently went by contraries, for he was known throughout the city as a vicious, wild character. His place of business was, however, afterwards changed from Broadway to 117 Wisconsin street, where he remained several months. He finally left the city, having, it is understood, been debarred from practicing in the courts. The next place he struck was Chicago. What he did there and what he did afterwards is not known here. His acquaintance was limited, as he was not a man to make friends.

His Life Chicago.

CHICAGO, July 2.—Charles Guitteau, the man who attempted to assassinate the president, has been more or less known in Chicago for the past ten years. He was a disreputable lawyer, and has generally been considered half insane. He went to New York seven or eight years ago, and upon his return in 1876 he professed to have been converted, and delivered several lectures under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. He next appeared at the head of a scheme to buy the Chicago Inter-Ocean, and run it on the plan of the New York Herald, but as he had neither capital nor backing, the matter was soon dropped by him. He left for Washington several months ago.

CHICAGO, July 2, 1 P. M.—There are many recollections of Charles J. Guitteau, which is his correct name, who lived here several years and acquired an unenviable reputation. He was at one time on the point of marriage with an estimable young lady on the south side, but his character became known just in time to prevent such a calamity to the lady and her family.

Guitteau left town [illegible] after this [illegible]. He was here [illegible] years ago, and [illegible] and would go to almost any length to get his name in the papers. He was arrested here once for [illegible]. He got another in his head that he [illegible] for official position, and has been trying with all his power to get a consulate at Marseilles.

More of Guitteau's History.

NEW YORK, July 3.—A lawyer in this city, who has had some indirect legal dealings with the Chicago lawyer, Charles Guitteau, says some four years ago he was practicing in this city and was in the habit [illegible] street and secured judgment for $350. [illegible] his legal practices were based on the same order of professional procedure.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—The assassin was [illegible] and lodged with his landlady as expectant of a foreign appointment. He applied for the place of U. S. minister to Austria, then consul general to France, but had no endorsements whatever, filing only a copy of one of his speeches during the presidential campaign last year. He claimed he was with Grant and Conkling in their canvassing for last fall, and says he is from Freeport, Ill. Is aged 40 years. Director of the mint Burchard knows his family. He evidently planned the assassination, but without providing for escape. He believed he could convince Sherman he did right. He was hurried to jail so fast there was no time for lynching.

Col. Ingersoll knew Guitteau as a quiet and sober man, and believes his insanity feigned.

The assassin Guitteau is a well known figure to the people at the white house. He has tried on several occasions to pass himself off as a newspaper reporter. He frequently wrote notes to the president, of which the following is a sample: "I regret the trouble you are having with Senator Conkling. You are all right, and should maintain your position. You have my support and that of all patriotic citizens. I would like an audience of a few moments." He used to seize upon the White House state stationery, take some of it off and write innumerable letters. He would also secure blank cards by writing himself a supply, if he should ever need them and one day Col. Crook, disbursing clerk, said to him, "You seem to make yourself at home and be laying in a supply of stationery." Said Guitteau to him in an insulting manner, "Do you know who I am? I am one of the men who make presidents." Last Tuesday he asked one of the employes and was very particular in inquiring when the president would leave and by what train and road. He has an [illegible] face at times. One day he said that this was a bad [illegible] of a government. The people are no better than slaves."

Guitteau's Defense.

CHICAGO, July 3.—Emory Storrs says there is no way of punishing the assassin, who is surely a lunatic to his personal knowledge. The only thing possible is to shut him up in the asylum for the dangerous insane.

Logan and Storrs.

Storrs as well as Gen. Logan refuses to be interviewed, the results contingent on the death of the president, neither seeing anything very gloomy in view of the situation.

The Assassin's Documents.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—The package of documents left by Guitteau intended for Byron Andrews of the Inter Ocean were placed in the hands of the police and were delivered to the [illegible]. Afterwards they were handed to district attorney Corkhill, in whose possession they remain. Effort was made to obtain them from Col. Corkhill, but he deems it improper to give them out for publication, and steadfastly refuses to permit them to be seen, or even examined. Only the contents of the note addressed to Andrews was made known, [illegible] that he has no acquaintance with Guitteau.

Guitteau as an Office Seeker.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—It is asserted that Guitteau was once consul. He has never been appointed, but was always a persistent office seeker [illegible] and Blaine. [illegible]

Guitteau's Strange Actions.

[illegible] several times recently, and appeared to be under the influence of liquor. On one of these visits subsequent to the first one mentioned, Guitteau succeeded in reaching the rotunda of the building, where he was noticed examining the scaffold from which murderers had been hanged.

Pursuant to orders from the attorney general, the officer in charge of the jail declined to give any further information, nor would he state in what cell the prisoner was confined. This officer was an attendant at the county jail at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln.

A Tenderhearted Assassin.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—Guitteau said on his way to jail that the president's assassination was premeditated, and he went to Long Branch for the purpose of shooting him there, but was deterred by the enfeebled and saddened condition of Mrs. Garfield, which appealed so strongly to his sympathies that he could not.

MISCELLANEOUS DISPATCHES.

Concerning the Absorbing Topic of the Hour.

The President's Wife.

LONG BRANCH, July 2.—Mrs. Garfield is almost frantic over the news. Her physician allows her to see none of the serious dispatches, but dictate hopeful ones to her. A dispatch to Gen. Grant, which has relieved Mrs. Garfield's anxiety, says: "The president's wounds are not mortal; he was shot in the arm and hip." Mrs. Garfield will depart on special train for Washington at one o'clock. She is now calmer. Dr. Bliss has just telegraphed that the wounds are not necessarily mortal.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—Mrs. Garfield, although still weak from her recent illness and shocked by the suddenness of the great grief which has come to her, has behaved since her arrival with a courage and self control equal to her husband. Not only has she not given way to terror and anxiety which she necessarily feels, but she has been constantly by his side encouraging him with her sympathy and giving efficient aid so far as it has been in her power to the attending physicians.

Vice President Arthur will not Leave New York.

NEW YORK, June 2.—Senator Jones said he had asked Vice President Arthur whether he should go to Washington tonight. He said he certainly would not go unless sent for, as he could not well separate himself from his official position, and his visit under present circumstances might be misunderstood. Privately he might have liked to go for the purpose of tendering his aid and sympathy, but in the present state of affairs it could not well be done.

Surgeons in Council.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—The following physicians are in consultation at the executive mansion: Drs. Bliss, Ford, Huntington, Woodward, U. S. A., Townsend, Lincoln, Reyburn, Morris, Purvis, Patterson, Surgeon General Barnes and Surgeon General Wales. Bulletins of his condition, from the Executive Mansion, will hereafter be telegraphed every half hour.

A Startling Theory.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—There is a theory which has many adherents that the attempted assassination was not the work of lunatics but the result of a plot much deeper and darker than has been suspected. It is stated in support of this theory that Guitteau arrived beforehand with a hackman so as to be ready for the president when he arrived at the depot.

"The Trouble is Elsewhere."

A gentleman from the sick room said the president's son James was crying, and that when the president noticed it he said, "Don't, Jimmy, don't cry. The head is still all right, but the trouble is elsewhere."

THE TURF.

THE NATIONAL HORROR.

Intense Excitement and Fearful Suspense everywhere—How the News of the Foul Deed was Received.

The Excitement created in Washington over the Assassination.

[SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.]

WASHINGTON, July 2.—Before the president was removed from the depot [illegible] chamber of death. [illegible] Business men and others, with faces pale with excitement and eyes [illegible] straining, [illegible] at the doors of the depot [illegible]. At last the door was opened and [illegible] the doctor [illegible]. "He is not dead. He is not in any immediate danger, and in fact there are hopes of his recovery." The purport of these words was conveyed to all the people present, and was transmitted from lip to lip, and from lip to wires all over the country. The city drew a long breath, and the excitement, which had been at white heat thus far, cooled off. Then there was a stir at the outer edge of the crowd, and the people were forced right and left and everyway. It was to make room for an ambulance which had been summoned to transport the suffering president to the white house. Tenderly was he borne from the building to the vehicle, and gently and gently was he laid in the mattress therein. Then the vehicle drove off slowly to the white house, followed at a respectful distance by the crowd. When he reached the executive mansion he was borne inside and was [illegible] by the surgeon general. Dr. Bliss, who attended him from the first, and other physicians. The friends of the wounded chief stood sorrowfully about him, the doors closed between them and [illegible], and the [illegible] of the city waited the end.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—The city is wild with excitement. The whole populace is gathered about the Baltimore & Potomac depot. [illegible] planned the assassination with the idea [illegible] can be ascertained of making Arthur President.

CHICAGO, July 2, 5 P. M.—Reports of the excitement are pouring in from every county, village and universal interest is evidenced by [illegible] inquiry.

News from Various Points.

CINCINNATI, July 2.—There are reports from all parts of the country [illegible]. Intense sorrow is reflected. [illegible]

MILWAUKEE, July 2.—The excitement here is simply awful. The entire populace is on the street rushing wildly about newspaper centers with [illegible] and indignation.

Arthur and Conkling.

NEW YORK, June 3.—Gen. Arthur and Senator Conkling, who arrived in town this morning from Albany, put up at the Fifth Avenue hotel. The vice president was found in the lobby of the hotel. He said he had not received any private dispatches regarding the shooting, and knew nothing more than was announced on the bulletins. If it were true, he said he felt exceedingly sorry for the president, whose present state of health is precarious. Senator Conkling remained in his room and would not be interviewed.

Business Suspended—The People's Suspense.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—At all the departments business has been almost entirely suspended. All the cabinet officers have been during the entire day at the white house, as also have many others. The sidewalks at the executive mansion were densely thronged with people who anxiously await bulletins which at frequent intervals are being posted at the gate.

Excitement at San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 2.—The board of supervisors met today and passed resolutions expressing abhorrence of the assassination of the president and tendering the sympathies of the [illegible] to the president and family. The committee having in charge the celebration of the Fourth has decided to [illegible] postpone the celebration [illegible] effect will be at once issued.

The Voice of the Press.

NEW YORK, July 2.—The Commercial says: This crime threatens the existence of the nation, reduces the free, intelligent, enlightened republic of the world to a level with a South American confederation or the Russian autocracy. It is a senseless, savage, cold-blooded assassination of the nation through the heart of its most honored citizen. Whoever the perpetrator may be, however low, rich or poor, powerful or despised, the nation will extort from them merciless retribution.

The Post says: There was a gathering of politicians around Conkling and Arthur this afternoon as they walked together to the Fifth avenue hotel. Conkling ran briskly across the hall, avoiding the reporters, and bounded up the stairs two at a time. The vice-president tried to be cool, but was evidently much excited by the news. He said he certainly hoped Bliss' report that the wound wouldn't be fatal was true. It's a most shocking event and has so staggered me I don't know what to think. Will you go to Washington at once? No, sir, that is not my intention, but I do not care to talk about the matter at present. If the wound should result fatally I suppose you will at once go to Washington? I can't say; I do not wish to be quoted as discussing the matter.

The Post's editorial: [illegible] assailant of President Garfield is reported to have made immediately after the deed and which seemed to indicate political motive on his part, may well be taken for [illegible]. It is hardly necessary [illegible] has given a shock to the minds and hearts of the American people only less grievous than that caused by the assassination of President Lincoln, not only by reason of President Garfield's personal popularity, but because every good citizen feels such occurrence to be national misfortune and disgrace, and because no one, to whatever party he may belong, can close his eyes to the political confusion which must ensue from such a change of the administration as would follow his death.

The New York Express says: The attempted assassination of the president [illegible] outraged by it. There is only one party in America in view of such crime as this [illegible] large enough for political assassins [illegible] the breasts of fifty millions [illegible] one sentiment in the United States [illegible] the republic [illegible] has been assailed in the person of the president.

The Feeling in New York.

NEW YORK, July 2.—At the newspaper offices [illegible] constantly [illegible] Merritt is much agitated [illegible] political significance [illegible]. "When the president dies, Arthur is president." [illegible] dead.

IRISH LAND LEAGUE.

A meeting of the Irish Land League was held yesterday afternoon at Red Men's hall, [illegible] in the chair.

The reports of the treasurer of the committee on picnic were received. The report of the picnic committee showed the receipts to be $751 [illegible] and the expenses $259.[illegible], leaving the net proceeds $[illegible].

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That this League expresses its abhorrence of the cowardly and unwarranted attack made upon the president of the United States, and that we sincerely hope that his life will be spared to fulfill the great duties he has been called upon to perform.

MONDAY MORNING, JULY 4, 1881

THE GREAT ATROCITY.

[illegible] a Frenchman by birth [illegible] vagabond [illegible] lawyer [illegible] political morals just suited [illegible] system of politics and [illegible] for [illegible] stalwart and an admirer of the political [illegible] and management of which Conkling and Arthur are the representatives, left Chicago last February for Washington to secure the United States consulship at Marseilles [illegible] Pretty much ever since he has been hanging around the White House and [illegible] the president for the appointment. Not obtaining it he reached the conclusion that he was a [illegible] man. In his opinion the offices were not being distributed properly. The president was not obedient to the stalwarts, but [illegible] constitutional [illegible] Mr Conkling [illegible] unsparing malignity [illegible] him as a traitor [illegible] obligations and proclaimed him a monster of black ingratitude [illegible] Washington organ of the stalwarts [illegible] principle of honor and [illegible] demanding his impeachment and removal from [illegible] improper interference in the political affairs of New York. All these things contributed to inflame the mind of Charles Guiteau, the stalwart of stalwarts, who had failed to secure the consulship [illegible] Marseilles. Disdaining all ineffectual remedies he resolved to employ the philosophy of nihilism and to correct all the evils of which himself, Senator Conkling and [illegible] Gorham so bitterly complained, by assassinating the president. How he proceeded to carry the resolution into effect our dispatches relate. It is already said that he is a madman. But we are not to look for real sanity in nihilism, nor in that peculiar form of political violence outrage and immorality which goes with us under the name of stalwartism. Still there was method enough in his madness. Besides it had in it none of that milk of human kindness which forbade it to catch the nearest way. It became necessary to murder the president to vindicate the stalwarts and to save the party. The reasoning by which this was justified, as we have it from the assassin's own statement, is fully as rational as any of the reasoning by which assassination usually attempts to justify itself. Of course men like Conkling and Gorham abhor assassination. They would have nothing to do with a vagabond like Guiteau. They are amazed and shocked that such a monster should exist. Nevertheless there is little probability that had it not been for their immoral and outrageous warfare upon the president to uphold their system of political robbery, this miserable outcast would ever have turned assassin. It was not his mind that conceived the iniquity that flaunts itself before the country under the name of stalwartism. He attempted the life of President Garfield in order to make Arthur president. But it was not he who supplied the logic that led him to the conclusion that it would be well if Garfield were out of the way, so that Arthur could come in. Directly this assassin represents nobody but himself. Indirectly though not remotely he is at once a representative and a product of the [illegible] combined infamies of American and foreign politics. Men do not yet, nor ever will, gather figs of thistles, and the corrupt tree will bring forth corrupt fruit forevermore.

In this country we are [illegible] pernicious ideas and practices of [illegible] and are affording an asylum to the class who hold and practice them. In the old world these classes are held [illegible] In our country they are [illegible] encouraged. Cultivated by political demagogues, they are invited to that abuse of liberty which runs into excess of license. Not long since the czar of Russia was murdered. Societies in the United States rejoiced in the crime. Speakers openly justified it, and some predicted with a sort of exultation that the president of the United States would be the next victim. These utterances passed almost without rebuke. People looked upon them as the words of a class of population despicable in numbers as in vileness, and therefore not at all dangerous. It would be utterly foolish, many thought, to pay any attention to threats of such characters. But assassins are not dangerous from their number, for their number has ever been small. The danger arises from toleration of those miscreants whose principles and teachings lead up to assassination. Doctrines of this sort can never be propagated without great danger. In fact propagation of any immoral or wicked doctrine is sure to lead to crime. There are many growing immoralities that we must repress if we would save our country.

Is not this attempt on the life of the president of the United States just what we might almost expect under the circumstances existing? In all ages political and social corruptions have produced monstrous births. Since we have among us societies which applaud assassination of rulers, and men in large numbers who believe in and struggle for the immoral and corrupt system of spoils in politics, since all the foundations of our national life are being undermined by the struggle for office, and since the public service is looked upon as legitimate prey for every brigand who can raise himself to the dignity of a boss, and every sub-brigand who is ready to enroll himself among the followers of a boss, since the conscience of the country permits itself to slumber while political and social wickedness plans its assaults and fights for the mastery, what wonder that now and then the country is startled by some crime of hideous enormity, which seems to strike at the very basis of national life? At such a time men may well hold their breath as they question their fellows upon the future of the republic. In a despotic country the habit of assassination of rulers is not so appalling, for it may be dealt with by repression, and there are bayonets enough. But in popular government, in a country controlled by public opinion, if assassination of chief rulers or magistrates grows into a habit (and we must remember that this is the second time in sixteen years) who can forecast the end? No mind can entertain the thought without a shudder.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

The shock that has fallen upon the nation renders it impossible to celebrate this anniversary in the form that otherwise would have been observed. National pride gives way to national humiliation. This great Babylon that we had builded, what of its foundations? Is it as a house built upon the sand? We had boasted of its perfection and strength. In our judgment [illegible] our dreams it was [illegible] the mountain [illegible] as the rock. But suddenly our attention is arrested. A shock shakes the great structure to its centre. Is an event like this necessary to give us pause? [illegible] and it must recall our attention to the [illegible] that though the [illegible] of our national life is fair [illegible] corruption [illegible] all [illegible] infects [illegible]

Because [illegible] national anniversary that was celebrated by our fathers it does not follow that we [illegible] purpose and virtue [illegible] It is true that great national [illegible] that have lasted for a century should [illegible] appeal to reason for support. They [illegible] perpetuate themselves. They ought to gather into the blood of successive generations accumulate rich and suggestive associations and [illegible] the golden woof [illegible] sober web of national history [illegible] develop impulse and [illegible] stronger [illegible] each [illegible]

For [illegible] should [illegible] what was [illegible] that [illegible] these [illegible] can [illegible] usual success [illegible] demonstrations [illegible] have left [illegible] practical [illegible] shall [illegible] we shall never realize [illegible] get back [illegible] the wholeness of [illegible]

Is this possible? [illegible] anniversary [illegible] the manner in which it was [illegible] Everything [illegible] nation once [illegible] the day is [illegible] by [illegible] has any [illegible] festival of sentiment [illegible] our patriotism by celebrating the [illegible] July. The feeling of the [illegible] The day will never [illegible] the individual sincerity [illegible] national feeling that gave it its old meaning shall be renewed.

In any view of the case it [illegible] where we are. [illegible] in our political and national life [illegible] direct national calamities [illegible] among us in public life and are not their corruptions winked at, excused and even applauded? It is customary for us to think that many old things are going out of the fashion. But think of it as we may, act as we will, we shall not get away from the old fashioned truth: Righteousness exalteth a nation but sin is a reproach to any people.

CONDITION OF THE PRESIDENT.

It is apparent from the dispatches that describe the nature and locality of the wound in the president's body that the danger of a fatal result is very great. Indeed it seems wonderful and almost miraculous that death was not a speedy result. The revolver was one of large calibre and great power, and the direction taken by the ball shows how great is the danger. Nevertheless the bulletins since the first twelve hours after the assault have continued to give increasing hopes of a favorable result, and this is fully confirmed by the latest bulletins received up to the hour this paper was sent to the press. Recovery of the president may be hoped for, but is not assured. This is all that can now be said.

The Daily Oregonian.

MONDAY MORNING, JULY 4, 1881.

CITY.

SEVERELY STABBED.—Last evening a stabbing affair occurred at a saloon down on First street, resulting in the very serious wounding of a man named J. Doughty by John Toby. Doughty is steward on the American ship Merom, and Toby is second officer on the same vessel. These parties met last evening in a saloon, and began discussing the question as to who was the most fleet of foot. Both went out and ran a foot race, and the one who was distanced came to still paid for the drinks. The question came up again, when Toby got angry and said he could whip Doughty and the cook of the Merom, who was in the saloon at the time. Toby made a pass at Doughty, which the latter parried. He made another thrust and drove the point of a small knife into the left side. The blade entered between the ribs just below the heart and penetrated to the cavity. The point also entered the lower end of the lung. Both parties were arrested and taken to the city jail. Toby was locked up and will have an examination to-morrow. Dr. Saylor was called and made an examination of the wounded man, and gave him a hypodermic injection to quiet him, after which Doughty was sent to St. Vincent Hospital. His injuries are very severe, but not considered necessarily fatal.

MR HALLENBECK'S FAREWELL SERVICES.—A press of other matter crowds out all but the merest mention of the farewell services Sunday night. The Taylor street church was jammed both in the audience room and the vestry. Not less than 1300 persons were present. Mr Hallenbeck spoke first in the over-flow meeting and then at length in the audience room. His remarks in both places seemed to touch the hearts of all, especially his words of earnest farewell. Mr. Hallenbeck is in great need of rest, having been in almost continuous service since last November. He goes from here to Victoria for a few days only, and from there to Seattle, where he begins evangelistic work Sunday, July 10th. Mr. Hallenbeck has won for himself hosts of friends in Portland, who will follow him in his work in other places with great interest. There will be no revival services to-day, but on Tuesday and every other day this week, services at 4 o'clock and at 8 o'clock as usual, in the Y. M. C. A. hall.

CONTRACT TRANSFERRED.—Our Salem correspondent says: "We are informed that extensive operations in your city, which necessitate the individual attention of the enterprising firm of Robinson & Sons, of your city, has induced them to transfer their contract to lay the brick work of the Oregon Insane Asylum to Thomas Mann, Esq., the well known Portland contractor, under whose direction the brick work on the state capitol building was performed. Robinson & Sons had the work well under way when the transfer of the asylum job was effected and no delay will be occasioned by the change of contractors."

DWELLING DESTROYED.—A correspondent writing from Cottage Grove under date of the 2d sends the following: The dwelling house of Henry Cain, about twelve miles south of this place, was burned about 11 o'clock, P. M., on the night of June 29th. Mr. Cain and his family barely escaping with their lives and saving nothing but a sewing machine and a sack of flour. The family were all asleep and the first intimation they had of the fire was the roof falling in. This seems a good place for fire, lately as the dwelling houses of W. W. Shortridge and P. Numbers have both been on fire, but were put out without much damage.

LURLINE AND VANCOUVER.—The Vancouver transportation company's steamer Vancouver will leave Vancouver for Portland this morning at 8 o'clock A. M., and the Lurline an hour later, (9 A. M.) The Lurline will leave Portland for Vancouver at 1:15 P. M. to give excursionists an opportunity to breathe the fresh river air, and return leaving Vancouver at 5 P. M. Fare, round trip, 50 cents. The Vancouver can be secured during the day in Portland for short trips.

BOUND EAST.—J. J. Comstock is among the passengers who sailed Saturday on the steamer State of California. He goes east to see his father still living at the old home where he was born on the Atlantic side. The old gentleman is now in 84th year, and feeling that his time is near at hand, he sent a message to his son, whom he has not seen for 32 years to visit him. Mr. Comstock, in obedience to the summons, is now on the way to the place of his birth.

GUESTS OF NO. TWO.—Last evening Astoria Engine Co. No. One and Rescue Engine Co. No. Two arrived in the city by the steamer Lurline from Astoria. These companies were met at the foot of Alder street by delegations from the Portland fire department, and headed by a band of music escorted the visiting firemen to the house of Multnomah Co. No. Two. The Astoria firemen will be the guests of No. Two during their stay in the city.

PRINTERS' UNION.—The following is a list of officers elected by the Portland Typographical Union: President, Capt. H. K. W. Ayres; first vice-president, C. M. Elliott; second vice-president, Mrs. E. H. Rogers; financial secretary, L. H. Wells; recording and corresponding secretary, J. M. Vaughn; treasurer, Charles Mair; sergeant-at-arms, O. W. Dunbar. There are at present about forty members of the union.

HELD TO ANSWER.—J. H. Sternberger, who was arrested last Sunday, charged with making an indecent assault on a woman at the American Exchange Hotel, has had an examination before the police judge. The testimony being considered sufficiently conclusive, the defendant was held to answer the charge before the grand jury. His bonds were fixed at $500, and in default he was committed.

ARRESTED FOR BURGLARY.—George Webber was arrested in this city Saturday on a warrant from The Dalles, charging him with burglary. He is accused of robbing the safe of Hall Backensto, a barber at the Umatilla House of $280. Webber, it is said, was in the employ of Backensto and had the combination to his safe. He will be sent to The Dalles for trial.

CONVOCATION OF WASHINGTON.—The Churchman says: "The time for holding the first convocation of Washington is not yet fixed, but will probably be some time in September. We hope to be able to announce it in our next issue. Vancouver is selected as the place for it, and it is expected that St. Luke's church will be consecrated at the same time.

CHILDRENS' PATRIOTIC SERVICE.—At the Congregational church last night there was a very timely patriotic service given by the Sunday school. It consisted of recitations tending to cultivate the spirit of patriotism and love of country, songs and scriptural responsive reading. It was interesting and enjoyable throughout.

G. A. R. BALL.—In order that there may be no misunderstanding as regards the ball to be given by the G. A. R. Tuesday, we are requested to state that an admission of 50 cents will be charged for a badge, which can be procured from the members of the post. The proceeds will be appropriated to the relief of the post friends.

APPOINTED INSPECTOR.—Captain George H. Burton, 21st infantry, is appointed special inspector on certain ordnance and ordnance stores at Fort Klamath, Oregon, for which Captain Stephen G. Whipple, 1st cavalry, commanding company L, is accountable, reported the 18th inst. as requiring the action of an inspector.

MANDAMUS CASE.—It was expected that Judge Stott would decide the mandamus case Saturday, (the contested mayoralty case), but owing to the fact that counsel filed some briefs in regard to the matter in controversy, the decision was postponed. The court has adjourned until the 11th.

LOADING FOR PORTLAND.—A dispatch from New York dated July 2d says: "The Samaria, after being in the berth over fifty days, is at last full, and the Standard has taken the berth, also the Levi G. Burgess, and are loading cargoes of railroad iron for Portland."

PICNIC.—The picnic given by the Verein Eintracht yesterday, at Herrall's Park, was successful in a financial sense and very enjoyable. The attendance was large. The afternoon and evening was devoted to games, dancing and vocal music by the singing section.

CALENDAR.—According to the Churchman the following is the calendar for July: 3, third Sunday after Trinity; 10, fourth Sunday after Trinity; 17, fifth Sunday after Trinity; 24, sixth Sunday after Trinity; 25, St. James' day; 31, seventh Sunday after Trinity.

USHERED IN.—A few minutes past twelve the Fourth was ushered in by the blowing of half a dozen or more steam whistles, ringing of fire bells and the explosion of all manner of fireworks by boys who had not the patience to wait until daylight.

APPOINTMENTS.—The following are Bishop Morris' appointments for July: 3, Portland; 4, duties of chaplain at the celebration in Portland; 7, Gardiner; 10, Empire City and Marshfield; 12, Parkersburg; 14, Port Orford; 17, Ellensburg.

UNTIL MIDNIGHT.—The Jefferson street ferry will run until twelve o'clock to-night to accommodate East Portlanders who wish to see the fireworks.

THE STEAMERS.—The Columbia arrived here at 3:30 Sunday morning. The State crossed to sea Saturday afternoon at three o'clock.

THE BAND CONTEST.

The following bands will participate in the contest at Mechanics' Pavilion to-morrow evening for prizes offered by Mellis Bros. & Co.:

HOW THE NEWS WAS RECEIVED HERE.

Extraordinary Eagerness all over the States—The Crime referred to by Ministers.

The first news of the assassination was received by THE OREGONIAN at 8 o'clock Saturday morning, and spread like wildfire. The report was at first discredited by many, but the second bulletin confirmed the startling announcement, and every subsequent dispatch was eagerly read. No great excitement occurred, but a deep feeling of sadness, not unmixed with terror prevailed. Business among wholesale houses was practically suspended, and the entire day devoted to the acquisition of fresh news and its discussion. On every street corner down town, on docks, in warehouses, in offices, in hotels—everywhere knots of men gathered, all agreeing in the prediction the republic could scarcely recover from the blow inflicted on it by the murder of President Garfield. THE OREGONIAN office was besieged all day by anxious crowds, the first question being, "What is Garfield's condition?" the second, "Who shot him?" and the third, "What was the reason for shooting?" During the forenoon, and as late as one o'clock it was hoped that the wound was not serious, but dispatches received after that hour destroyed all remaining hope, and by five o'clock it was generally believed that morning would bring the worst news. About dark, a false report of the president's death obtained considerable circulation, and in the light of late afternoon telegrams easily gained credence.

The Evening Telegram got out a first edition at half-past 3, but the press could not strike off papers as fast as a score of enterprising boys sold them. A second edition with later news was printed at half-past 4, and was exhausted in less than an hour. So great was the demand for still further information, that a third edition was issued at 10 o'clock, giving telegrams up to that hour, and these were all sold before midnight. A fourth edition of 2000 copies was printed at 6 on Sunday morning and sold before noon. Never in the history of Portland was there such an eagerness for news, not even when President Lincoln was assassinated, although then there was far more excitement, and never before were four editions of the same paper issued.

Nor was this extraordinary eagerness confined to Portland alone. From the most remote points in Oregon, Washington and British Columbia, as well as from towns near, reached by wire, came telegrams of inquiry to THE OREGONIAN. One from the Salem fair grounds read, "For God's sake, send anything relating to shooting of Garfield." So numerous and so urgent were the inquiries, that one of the staff was kept busy all afternoon writing answers. The news was telegraphed to Astoria by this paper in time to reach passengers on the outgoing and the incoming steamer. Since Saturday morning THE OREGONIAN has received more than 20,000 words relating to the attempted assassination.

It was no small relief Sunday morning to the many loyal citizens of Portland who retired the night before with the belief that tidings of President Garfield's death would reach them on arising, to know that he had passed a peaceful night, and that at least a spark of hope remained. THE OREGONIAN'S ten o'clock telegram from Washington was read from several pulpits at morning service and gave renewed hope. In every church fervent prayers for the recovery of the president were offered, and ministers referred to the enormous atrocity.

Trinity Episcopal Church.

Bishop Morris preached in Trinity church Sunday morning from the words: "The glorious liberty of the children of God." His sermon had reference to the theme of "liberty" as bearing upon the approaching national anniversary, but claimed that there was another liberty "unsung by poets, and by senators unpraised," far more blessed and glorious than that which concerned merely civil and temporal interests. This was the glorious liberty of the children of God, in their willing obedience to divine law and in their mastery of their own appetites and passions. The sermon concluded with the following words in regard to the assassination or attempted assassination of President Garfield:

It would be impossible, my brethren, to discuss such a topic as this at such a time as the present, and overlook that recent awful occurrence at which our whole country to-day stands amazed and dumbfounded. Just on the eve of the celebration of our national birthday, when we should be felicitating ourselves upon the happy heritage we had received of our fathers and singing their praises and our own, comes this awful shock, this horror of the assassination of our chief magistrate, by which we are disgraced in the eyes of the whole civilized world, and our paeans of praise turned into mockery and humiliation.

I suppose the first thought of all will be that this is but the act of a single madman, without concert or collusion with any conceivable party or faction. We have not yet come to this, when in times of serene peace in our land, when prosperity in all the departments of business abounds, and the great mass of the people are contented and happy in their lot, that the strife of political leaders in their simple greed of office and its pay will organize an agency to take the life of the head of this great nation. Surely no such day of infamy and ignominy has yet come upon this our land. And still this crime is so infamous, the victim so high in station, the consequences so momentous and so far reaching, that almost unbidden and surely without any partisan bias, those well known words rise to our remembrance:

"Besides, this Duncan
Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking off.
And Pity, like a naked, new-born babe
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubin hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers of the air
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind."

And yet what have we to say of the remote cause of all this, but that it is in this spirit of lawlessness which is so deep-seated in the human heart. It is because men are the slaves of their passions and lusts; because they live for present indulgence and gratification, and are driven headlong by an unsanctified and blind will, that such crimes become possible.

Let us see to it, my brethren, that we read the lessons of this sad and awful occurrence aright. Let us take care that we do not resemble the parable of the Pharisee, saying, I thank thee that I am not as other men—extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican." You may not be a red-handed assassin. You may not be an unscrupulous politician, living by trickery and intrigue, fraud and bribery. You may stand fair and square in the eyes of men, yet you may be the servant and slave of some unholy passion, some earthly and low-born purpose and desire. Your whole life may have nothing noble or elevating in it, and, with all your God-given faculties, you may be living only for self, and for the present hour. You would scorn to be the slave of any man, and will you then content yourselves in the slavery of sin? Will you hug and kiss those chains that bind you to the most debasing servitude man can descend to? Seek then that happy heaven-born liberty which is your rightful heritage. Take the truth of God as your guide throughout life, and that truth shall make you free indeed. Standing upon this rock, there is naught below the skies that you may fear; but in conscious safety you may face the world, knowing that the mighty God is on your side, and that he has made you a partaker of the glorious liberty of his own children.

Unitarian Church.

At the Unitarian church there was a large attendance. Rev. Mr. Eliot took for his text II Kings 2, 3, "And the sons of the prophets that were at Bethel came forth to Elisha and said unto him, 'Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day?' and he said 'Yes, I know it, hold ye your peace.'" Referring to the impertinence of these "under graduates" of the Hebrew college, and the fitting, twice repeated rebuke of Elisha, the speaker made the incident the text of a discourse on the sphere of silence, and referred successively to the eloquence of silence in nature, history, the lives and conduct of great men, and to its fitness at certain times in our own lives. Nature's choicest lessons have "no speech nor language," yet their words—the message each morning and evening, from the miracle of growth, and the arch of the night sky—"are gone to the end of the world." He referred to the comet appearing in silence out of the unknown deep of space and its silent message, "that the unexpected as well as what seems orderly to us, is in God's hand." The silence of great men, led to a reference to Plutarch's lives—where the power of reason is beautifully illustrated—and the silence of such men as Phocion, Cato, and Aristides, under contumely—or in the presence of Caesar, was described. These men also knew when to speak; tho' it meant death or exile. So Socrates turned over the court, and became a judge, and his judges became the accused in his eloquent words.

Too much talk is an American sin. Its injurious effect is widely evident and reacts on character. Our facility of expression is a fatal gift, leading to undue wordiness, "talking with our mouths" in politics, education, social life and religion. We talk so freely and loosely that as by a syphon the intellect and heart are drained off. The speaker showed the twofold harm possible in such a state of society; that on the one hand talk was taken to mean nothing; but on the other, rash, unbridled speech sometimes created an atmosphere which focalized into some unbalanced brain and nerved some hand with the unreason of the assassin or the deadly fanatic. After showing the danger of over-expression in religious life, and the impressiveness with which Jesus warned men against it and rebuked all wordiness, reference was made to the sphere of silence in the life of the nation. The reserve and ominous silence of the country in the great crisis of the war was alluded to. The silent forces are the great motive power, surging over brawling would-be leaders and machine policies. The power of silence and reserve to express true emotion was fitly illustrated when the events of yesterday were hurled upon us. It is too early to refer to these events, or attempt to trace their significance, too little do we know to decide whether the mere fortuitous act of a madman is before us, or a direct outcome of evil forces and tendencies in our institutions. But certainly this assassin's hand will unwittingly arrest and sharpen thought, and the hearts of many will be revealed, casting their weight openly into the scale of responsibility. If it serves to stop our rash, rushing, wordy people, and gets something like a sense of the organic relation of each citizen to the state, and responsibility for the wrong tendencies in it, good may come out of evil. A touching reference to the president was made to the nobility of his nature, his spontaneity and true greatness. The nation never had a sincerer friend—never a president it could less afford to lose. If he dies, "being dead he will yet speak" and we cannot but have him as silent leader in the great work, the settled purpose he cherished against corruption and evil political traditions. If he survives (may God grant it) he will have afresh place in the affection and trust of America. When Phocion died, his wife gathered his bones in the night time, and burying them by the fireside in her home said: "Blessed hearth, to your custody I commit the remains of a good and brave man, and beseech you render not [illegible] until the time that restores them to their right minds." May God so bury at home in our hearts, this teaching in the mysterious experience of the hour and bring out of it right-mindedness towards our great trust of patriotism.

At the close of the discourse, which was listened to with marked attention, the 12:30 dispatch was read, announcing the more favorable symptoms, after which the congregation slowly dispersed.

Baptist Church.

At the Baptist church Rev. I. A. Gray preached a sermon to a large congregation on the "Relations of Doctrine to Practical Life," in the course of which he referred to the attempted assassination of the president, in substance as follows.

No plan for the elevation of man will meet the needs of the race which does not include the whole race. We cannot afford to wait and hope for the entire populating power of cultured stock or the ultimate "survival of the fittest." The lowest classes, the vicious criminal classes are dangerous. They will not be sloughed off by the processes of nature. They are destructive. Sin brings forth death. It smites the holy with the cross and turns Barabbas loose upon the community. The lesson of the hour is assassination. The whole nation is struck dumb with terror and sorrow at the sight of a man prompted by his little petty passions and evil instigations pointing the weapon of death at our chief magistrate. It is to be hoped his crime is not prompted by any malignant faction or party. But the event has a profound significance. There seems to be an infectious breath of murder in the air. The Irish peasant shoots his landlord from behind hedges and coverts. Russia is reeling on insecurities. Terror and anguish over a dead ruler mingle with fear for a living one's life. Infernal machines and deadly explosives abound. The turbulent disorderly, depraved spirits, the thugs and murderers that sprout out of the filth and garbage of civilization render life insecure and threaten universal chaos. Tramps, adventurers, criminals, desperadoes and paupers, men who have fallen out with themselves and the existing order of things, writhe about the foundations of our free institutions. The gulf wider than [illegible] that fatal shot was made of greed and poverty. The nation lifts up its prayer for the life that lingers in the balance. On the threshold of this anniversary of independence we need to gird ourselves to new work as christians. You cannot hope to save a class and turn the lower orders loose to kill and destroy. These vast tides of discontented, uneducated, degraded men, pouring in upon us as never before must be picked up and cleansed and animated with better purposes. We need a radical and supernatural reform that shall go in personal power into the very depths of sin to renew and save. This world will not be pulled back to God by civil service reform, or by pictures or by poems. It is the work of religion, with its personal Savior, with its educational appliances to reach its arms of love down into the filth and foulness of sin, to teach the sanctity and higher meaning of life, the fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man. We are not to be saved by a sentiment or a mass convention, but by work done in the strength and promise of almighty God. The evil lies deeper than any mere vice, or single disorderly element. It is in the tendency of unrenewed and unsaved souls to all evils.

Salvation for the lost is the hope of the nation, and life and property are unsafe as long as men are left to roam about in the dominion of evil.

Presbyterian Church.

The thought of an eternal and beatific after-life voiced out of this troubled existence ran through Dr. A. L. Lindsley's sermon. He spoke with tender thought subdued feeling. The attempted assassination of the president of the United States may be the act of an insane man, but he feared it was the symptom of a deeper disease which was spreading in society—the body politic. The communism of France and the nihilism of Russia are attempting to overthrow society and reorganize it on the basis of a common [illegible] and animal prosperity. Some advanced thinkers are advocating agnosticism, which reduces all virtue and ideals out the hope of immortality. The press teems with essays and novels that labor to propagate the most dangerous and irreligious sentiments. The dominant philosophy of the age is materialistic and the tendency is to anything above gross matter and the forces that are visible scouted in high places. The direct outcome is skepticism and irreverence. They spread like contagion through all our domestic and social life. Add to these the lust for riches and the thirst for office, and much of the unrest of society and the stupendous frauds and crimes which infest it are traced to their sources. When religion is cast out the moral tone is lowered, society degenerates and makes an harvest of crimes possible and even frequent.

What a reflection upon political ambition is the atrocity which makes us shudder to-day! "Thus fades the glory of the world!" Clay, Scott, Greeley, emphasize this remark. A friend said to Daniel Webster, "I doubt whether the presidency could add to your fame." "Ah," said Mr. Webster, "the presidency is the grandest position in the world, and I want it, I want it!" Mr. Webster's disappointment, joined to that of many of our countrymen who have vainly sought the same high office, leads us to exclaim in the presence of this great calamity to-day, in the language of a British statesman, "What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue!"

The speaker then showed how we might escape the evils that beset every path of life. The wise agnostics on their own showing plunge out of this world into impenetrable gloom. The skeptic fares no better, tortured by doubt to the last. The Son of Man stands forth the author of the new life, which is also eternal. For it is written, "This is the record, that God hath given unto us eternal life, and that life is in his Son."

Congregational Church.

After the usual introductory services just before the prayer, Mr. J. A. Cruzan, in a brief prelude, said: "I believe in a personal God, a God who takes cognizance of the acts of men, and rules the destinies of nations. The bolt which fell so stunningly upon this nation yesterday out of what seemed a clear sky, fell not without His knowledge. God's thought was in it, though it may have been the work of a madman or worse! Perhaps God said that only by some such terrible blow, falling upon the nation as it stood upon the threshold of the anniversary of its birthday could the American people be aroused to the necessity of a return to the principles and the government of Washington and Hamilton, and the Adamses, aroused to the dread evils of "bossism" and personal politics and the rule of a time-serving politicians; aroused to the necessity of putting this government once more in the hands of statesmen, and aroused to the dreadful peril of selecting as candidates for the high office of vice president, men with no other recommendation than that they may be able to carry a pivotal state.

"Not since '61, when the first shot was fired upon Sumter; not since '65 when Abraham Lincoln was shot down in Ford's Theater, not since '76 when two great parties struggled like gladiators over the spoils of office and a disputed presidency, has the nation seen so dark and fateful a day as yesterday. And the news that President Garfield was shot down and that there was no hope for his life thrilled over the quivering wires, after the first thought of all the terrible deed, the second and most overwhelming thought was, "My God! What of the [illegible] of these United States?" But let us thank God that the latest news gives promise that God may perhaps spare us this deep humiliation and sorrow. And may this dread peril in which the nation is now placed by an assassin's bullet, arouse us to our duty as Americans. Upon you Christian men and women, upon the ministers, upon the religious [illegible] the press, and a free [illegible] practices of our forefathers."

Mr. Cruzan then read the last dispatch received by THE OREGONIAN in regard to the president's condition, and led in an earnest prayer for the president and the nation.

Taylor Street M. E. Church.

A very large audience was present. It was the regular monthly communion season, and the pastor spoke from I Cor. XI, 26. At the conclusion of his remarks he referred with feeling to the attempted assassination, and said, "During the late rebellion a young lady of this country was visiting Paris. It was at the time of our darkest hour. Just as she took her place in church for the regular Sabbath service, a friend whispered to her, 'Vicksburg is taken.' The great organ pealed forth, the audience rose in song; she stood for a moment, burst into a flood of tears and sat down, sobbing for joy. So in this day of bitterness we must not forget Christ has taken Vicksburg. The tread of His triumphant army is in the land; and though we may yet mourn a slain ruler we will weep for joy that we still have the living, conquering King of kings, who will make even this calamity a national blessing."

DROWNED.

Saturday afternoon, an Indian whose name could not be ascertained was drowned in the river opposite the water works. He was out on a raft of logs, and slipping between two of them, perished. At latest accounts the body had not been recovered.

The little three-year-old son of E. R. Paddock, who resides on Columbia slough, was drowned on Friday. From information obtained it seems that a man in the employ of Mr. Paddock had caught a large rat to which he had attached a string, and taking the child with him to the bank of the slough, he began throwing the rat in the water and permitting it to swim to the shore. This he did several times, and finally went away, leaving the little boy to amuse himself with the same wanton sport. An hour afterwards he was found in the slough drowned.

PORTLAND WILL CELEBRATE.

ADJOURNED MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

In View of Improved Condition of President Garfield, It is Decided to hold the Celebration According to the Programme.

Saturday evening an adjourned meeting of the executive committee was held at the council chamber. Mayor D. P. Thompson in the chair.

The chairman requested that the members present express their views in relation to the proper course to be pursued in view of the recent national calamity and the probable death of President Garfield.

Mr W. S. Newbury suggested that he considered it best to proceed with arrangements as if nothing had happened, and have all prepared. If President Garfield [illegible] Portland [illegible] formed him that if Garfield lived till to-morrow there were hopes of his recovery.

Mr. H. Y. Thompson believed in having a procession in any event. Should the worst prove true, it could be readily changed into a funeral procession, military marching with arms reversed, flags at half mast, ship of state draped, and attendants in mourning. Amusements could be dispensed with and in the place of them, eulogies could be delivered. The people would largely participate, and so show emphatically [illegible] perpetrated. It was [illegible] make thorough preparations and there would be no trouble.

[illegible] motion [illegible] by Mr. Thompson was adopted.

[illegible] that the [illegible] base ball [illegible] South Portland [illegible] was appropriated to [illegible] targets for the [illegible].

Mr. Newberry stated that Capt. [illegible] would make his own arrangements for firing salutes and would be supplied with $100.

Jordan on the part of the fire department stated all companies but Willamette would participate, and he would have two small engines on duty on the Fourth.

Captain [illegible] suggested that as the military [illegible] award the prize to the [illegible] best drilled company in parade. It was carried in the way of a [illegible].

Capt. M[illegible] would prefer [illegible] to receive $4. It would be better [illegible] each company [illegible] appearance. That was the opinion expressed by [illegible] Belcher.

Capt. Gerr preferred to take his chances in the [illegible] for the award.

On motion of H. Y. Thompson it was decided that no company should contest unless it had at least 20 men.

An appropriation of $5 was made to [illegible] stop" for the base ball players.

Jordan stated [illegible] of Astoria, and the Vancouver Engine Company would visit Portland and join in the celebration.

All clubs who compete for prizes are expected to join the procession in uniform.

The committee was $450 short and Mr. H. Y. Thompson thought it could not be collected after the Fourth. By economy it was shown that there may be found enough.

On motion of R. L. Norden the meeting adjourned till to-day at 2 P. M.

ADJOURNED MEETING.

At an adjourned meeting of the executive committee held yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the following proceedings were had:

Mayor D. P. Thompson read the following dispatch:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 11 A. M., 1881.

To THE OREGONIAN: The president's condition greatly improved. He secures sufficient refreshing sleep and during his waking hours is cheerful and inclined to discuss pleasant topics. Pulse 108 with more full and soft expression. Temperature and respiration nominal.

Considering this encouraging information the committee decided by unanimous vote to proceed with the celebration as hitherto announced. Before adjourning a resolution was adopted requesting a full attendance to be present at a meeting of the committee to be held at the council chamber on next Thursday evening, at 7:30 P. M., to settle matters relating to the celebration. The committee meeting then adjourned to meet at the place designated, on Thursday, July 7, 1881 at which time a general settlement of the expenses incurred in celebrating the Fourth will be effected.

[illegible]

The programme for the celebration to-day will consist of a salute of thirteen guns at sunrise and the raising of the flag [illegible], an other salute of thirty eight guns at [illegible] and thirteen guns at sunset. The procession will form promptly at 10:30 A. M. and move [illegible] at 11. The [illegible] will form on Morrison, Alder, Washington, Stark and Oak streets. The [illegible] proposed [illegible] First to Main, [illegible] Main to Front, [illegible] Vine, up Vine to North First, down North First to [illegible] Third [illegible] returning to the city plaza where the exercises will be held.

The literary exercises will consist of:

Prayer by Bishop Morris; address of welcome by the president, Hon. H. Y. Thompson; singing by the glee club; reading of the declaration of independence, [illegible] McCracken; [illegible] White [illegible] singing by the glee club; oration, Hon. Elwood Evans.

During the afternoon [illegible]

THE VISITORS.

To-day promises to be very large. Saturday evening a large number of visitors from various [illegible] of the state arrived by rail and steamer. Yesterday afternoon the west side train came down with four coaches loaded with passengers and the east side train arriving at 8 P. M. brought several hundred who will spend the Fourth here. Boats and trains arriving here this morning will bring thousands of visitors.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE FAVORITES RETURN.—The Fun on the Bristol party returned last evening from Salem, where they appeared four nights last week. The company will appear in Portland three nights more, also give one matinee performance. To-day there will be two special performances—this afternoon at 4 o'clock (to allow all to witness the procession and celebration exercises in the morning), and in the evening at 6 o'clock, terminating at 8:30 P. M., to allow all to witness the display of fireworks, which will not commence until 9 P. M. It is needless to state that there will be jammed houses. At the performances to be given there will be new features introduced during the second act, new songs, specialties, etc.

Capt. J. M. Gilman has concluded to go east with another party, to which he has added some new features, as selling round trip tickets, and taking another route so as to cross Suspension bridge at Niagara falls, arriving at 10 o'clock A. M. and remaining until the next morning. Conveyances to and from the hotels and hotel bill free to all excursionists. This excursion leaves Portland July 12th, 1881. Fare for this trip will be, to Chicago $80, to Chicago and return $150, to Boston $90, to Boston and return $175. Round trip tickets good six months. For further particulars call at or address the St. Charles Hotel, Portland, Or.

MONDAY MORNING, JULY 4, 1881.

STATE FAIR.

Twentieth Annual Exhibition of the Oregon State Agricultural Society.

FOURTH DAY.

The Receipt of the News of the Attempt to Assassinate the President; the Crowd in Suspense—The Display of Stock—The Races—Preparations for the Fourth.

Last night the wind veered to the south and the clouding weather threatened rain and disaster to the success of the fair, but this morning the atmospheric conditions were more auspicious, and the people began to flock into the grounds in increasing numbers, with every indication for one of the best days of the fair. Hardly, however, had the exercises of the day began when the first intelligence of the foul attempt to assassinate President Garfield was received, and for the balance of the day the subject of thought uppermost in the minds of the people, and the almost sole topic of conversation among them, was the terrible news. The routine business of the society went on, but the great object of interest was in the capital of the nation where the foul hand of the assassin had struck at the nation's head.

The first news came to Mr. Failing, train dispatcher for the railroad company, and soon after your correspondent received the substance of your first dispatches, which was posted on the bulletin board at the railway office and at the headquarters of THE OREGONIAN in the pavilion. Hundreds of people crowded around to read, and the expression was one of universal regret and indignation. From time to time during the day, your correspondent received telegrams concerning the condition of the president, and furnished them to the eager and earnest crowd.

The Committees

Were busy during part of the forenoon in examination of the various articles exhibited for premiums, and in most cases got through with their duties without any difficulty. In fact, in most of the departments there is so little competition that almost every exhibitor will be able to obtain a blue ribbon, or a red one at least. When the awards are made, will give more detailed information in regard to the many really meritorious articles and animals which can be seen on the grounds and make this fair one of interest second to very few of those which have preceded it.

The Races To-day

Were good in some respects, but were attended with rather more disagreements and misunderstandings than before, not however, through any fault or mismanagement of the superintendent or judges on the track; for as soon as a wrong in the conduct of any of these contests is seen by Superintendent Galloway, he at once endeavors to apply a remedy. For instance in the race for 2-year olds this afternoon, there were 3 entries, W. Gibson's Flintlock, Musgrove's Newsboy and J. Simpkins' Jack o' Trumps. On the first start Newsboy led away from the other two and got to the three-quarter post 50 yards ahead. But it seems the boy who rode him understood that the arrangement was that he should not win and he began to hold his horse back as much as he could, while Flintlock was under a hard whip and trying to get to the front. By the greatest effort Newsboy's rider succeeded in getting his horse beaten by about a length, but without hesitation the judges declared it no race, and that it must be run again. After a few minutes the colts were again brought out and started out again, but without being tapped off, and the judges decided that they would have to go once more, which they did after the trotting contest, Newsboy winning easily.

The horses named for the trotting contest in yesterday's report, all came up, looking well, though it was claimed that Inauguration was not in good condition, and that he went only to avoid a penalty for a failure to go. Some difficulty was experienced in starting this race, and a good deal of complaint among the spectators; but the first heat was finally begun, Dexter taking the lead and keeping it, with Inauguration pressing him closely and coming under the wire second; Gold Foil third, and Startle fourth; Belle Easter being shut out. Time, 2:35½. The second heat started a good deal like the first and resulted similarly, only Gold Foil came in second and Inauguration third. Startle was still a bad fourth. Dexter's heat; time 2:33½. The third heat was won squarely by Dexter in 2:33. The race altogether was not so satisfactory on account of the frequent breaks of all the horses, though Dexter, Inauguration and Gold Foil all did some excellent work.

On Monday there will be some splendid races, running and trotting, free for all, for large purses and with the other attractions the day will be one of the most interesting of the fair.

The Pavilion.

Passing along through this building we come again to the grain display, and find it to be really the finest that has been made for some years. George Bilshaw, of Lane county, who took the first premium at the centennial exhibition on wheat, shows here the largest collection ever shown in the state, there being in his exhibit not less than 100 varieties of plump well-grown wheat. The grain is displayed in jars carefully labeled, in sacks, and in heads on stalks. Blue ribbons attached show a large number of first premiums to this exhibitor. D. D. Prettyman, of Polk county, also makes a creditable exhibition of grains, and a really fine show of grasses, the latter being the only specimens shown. A. J. Pettyjohn makes a small exhibit in grain, and takes the blue ribbon on seeded corn, J. Hamilton taking the second. Mr. Hamilton also shows several varieties of wheat, one of oats, and a fine sample of tobacco. Sylvanus Condit exhibits the only sample of buckwheat.

Canned fruits and vegetables appear in limited quantity but excellent quality, L. C. Cline & Co. of Salem being the only exhibitors. Their goods are put up in the best manner, and there is no reason why this industry should not become much more extensive and profitable in this state. Mrs. M. A. Cline shows specimens of machine-dried fruit that are well done. Mrs. E. M. Kimsey shows sun-dried fruit, berries principally, that will certainly take a premium, as does also her daughter, Miss Annie, an industrious lassie of thirteen years. Mrs. Rossiter shows sun-dried fruit that is only second best because placed in competition with that first mentioned.

In jellies, preserves, bottled fruits and pickles Mrs. F. DeLashmutt makes a good display. She shows also homemade wines in eight varieties. Mrs. A. B. Crossman shows a dozen jars of berries freshly sealed that attest her skill in that business; Mrs. E. M. Kimsey a fresh lot of jellies, beautifully transparent; Mrs. J. V. Taylor a good variety of jellies, preserves and pickles, and Mrs. De Warriner and Mrs. Fostner each a half-dozen varieties of home-made wine. Before passing from this department we will note the neatness and taste shown by exhibitors in their work. On former occasions we have spoken of the fact that broken mugs, pitchers without handles, and indeed any sort of old crockery, was considered good enough in which to display these articles. These unsightly relics have this year been left on the pantry shelves or remanded to the children's play houses; not one of them appears on exhibition to mar the attractiveness of the display.

In the department of household cookery the exhibit is fuller than for years. Cake, biscuit and bread that attest the housewifely skill of Oregon women and girls are shown in great variety. So excellent is the quality that the puzzled committee has found it extremely difficult to decide to which belong the blue and which the red. The names of competitors in this valuable department we have been unable to obtain, but these will appear in due time in the published premium list.

In dairy products the display is good, especially in butter. From the samples shown one would not recognize the rancid article so often exposed for sale in our markets, as these are sweet, finely colored and fragrant with that most subtle and unmistakable odor, that of clean, fresh butter. Names are not attached to cards on this display, hence, as in the class last named, exhibitors will have to wait for the premium list to herald their names.

Several samples of Oregon bacon and hams, plain and sugar-cured are shown, their superiority over much of that that is imported being fully apparent to sight and smell. In these articles D. C. Howard takes the blue and Gilbert & McCally the red ribbon.

Having made the round of the farm products displayed, we turn now to the handiwork of laborers in other departments. In rag carpets, Joseph Albecht shows three specimens of well woven fabrics, that are both pretty and substantial. The only competitor in this line is Mrs. E. M. Kimsey whose exhibit is quite creditable. This lady also shows home made blankets, linsey, and two specimens of yarn carpet, prettily striped and neatly woven; Mrs. S. C. Buster shows homespun yarn, white and colored, and home knit socks and stockings. Two woolen and cotton balmoral skirts, woven in colors by Mrs. Kimsey, are shown, but they have been displayed at so many fairs that they are familiar objects to thousands of visitors, and having ceased to be ornamental should be put to the practical use for which they were designed. Coverlets and home made blankets are shown here in limited quantities, the "centennial department," already noted, having drawn this class of goods to a more appropriate channel.

Nothing less than an entire day will suffice to make detailed mention of the articles in the lady's department of fancy work, hence we will pass this until another day, and step out into the Floral Department.

This display is really magnificent, and joins the main pavilion at the south end. It is 240x68 feet. About half of this space is improved with a view to permanency by the society, being set out in trees and evergreen shrubs, well arranged and properly labeled. Time will improve this portion of the garden greatly, but the display is good, considering the fact that it is the growth of a few weeks. Exhibitors occupy the other half of the enclosure, and the well arranged beds are a perfect bower of varied beauty. The arrangement of the whole, under the supervision of Henry Miller, is a credit to his taste and skill in that line. Of the exhibitors Mrs. Capt. Scott shows 125 varieties of plants in gorgeous bloom; Mrs. J. V. Taylor, 110; Mrs. J. H. Haas, 65; Mrs. F. A. Smith, 120; Mrs. Florence Garrison, 163. Henry Miller's display is, as usual, chiefly in foliage plants and evergreens, and is, as usual, fine. The picture presented by this garden is indeed a fine one; the air is heavy with the subtle perfume of roses, heliotrope and mignonette; benches are conveniently arranged for rest, and the walks are ample for promenade. Taken altogether it is a source of constant delight to visitors.

In making note of the centennial display yesterday, we overlooked an interesting relic—a whip saw, bought in [illegible] in 1839, by Dr. Henry Prettyman, and brought to Oregon in 1847. It was used to saw the lumber for the construction of two flat boats at the Dalles, last conveyed the families and household goods of David Jacobs and John Powell of Multnomah county, D. D. Tompkins of Clackamas, the Joy brothers of Marion, and Dr. Prettyman, down the Columbia river. It is emphatically a pioneer belonging, dusty and dim with age, and a fitting reminder of the early days, when most of the present inhabitants of Oregon either lived in eastern homes or did not live at all.

Wm. Beck & Son

Have one of the most attractive exhibits in the pavilion, especially for the men folks, while showing also many articles for ladies' use. Their stock of guns, pistols, cutlery, fishing tackle, etc., etc., is neatly arranged and add much to the attractions on the right side of the pavilion, where they are located. Their courteous treatment of those visiting and inspecting their goods as well as those desirous of purchasing, makes their stand a place of very general resort. Their exhibit is probably one of the most valuable in the pavilion.

Miscellaneous.

The gospel meetings at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, conducted by Chaplain Stubbs, are not largely attended, but workers are as faithful as though hundreds, instead of tens, hearkened to their exhortations. On Monday there will be a grand temperance rally at the rooms at 3 and 7 o'clock P. M. Subject, "A constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of spirits."

Mr. Frank Dekum, president of the Mechanics' Fair Association, was on the grounds to-day, studying matters which will be of service in connection with the coming exhibition at Portland.

THE OREGONIAN went off like hot cakes this morning, buyers anticipating fuller accounts of the attempted assassination of the president than had reached the grounds by special dispatch from the office. Passengers stepping off the south bound train received the news with the greatest consternation, and the wildest excitement, augmented by the meagerness of the news, prevailed throughout the grounds.

Many booths, where in former years vendors of candy, fruits, etc., reaped a goodly harvest, are silent and tenantless this year. Even patent medicine men are non est, and catch penny shows have failed to show up. The creaking swings, once the delight of country lads and lasses, and their occupation gone.

The oration on the 4th will take place at 10:30 from the grand stand, Dr. Watts, orator. The procession, salutes, music, etc., will take place according to the programme before published. Races will commence at 1:30 o'clock. There will be two running and one trotting race. At their conclusion the glass ball shooting for premiums will take place followed by the rifle shooting match.

Slight showers fell Saturday night, hardly enough to lay the dust.

Messrs. Wadhams and Chown came up Saturday to assist in the Bethel exercises.

A most favorable committee report has been made on the hair work of Mrs. E. F. Matthews.

A man named Hines met with a serious accident in North Salem, the result of a runaway.

The switch from the main track to the Chemeketa has to a great extent killed the hack traffic.

Some 300 people came up yesterday on the special. Many causes may be assigned for the small number.

There was an immense demand for THE OREGONIAN Saturday evening and Sunday on account of the terrible event at Washington.

Pools on the running race were sold at the Chemeketa House, Trade Dollar selling first choice, Winters second and Caddie R and Jack Douglass in the field.

Mr. Failing, in charge of the trains, and Mr. L. G. Adair, of the telegraph office at the grounds, are very courteous and attentive to their duties, and things under their hands move like clockwork.

Superintendent Elliot has managed to get the six large portraits of the ex-governors from the capitol building and placed them in the booth on the left of the entrance to the pavilion yesterday. This will make a decided improvement and also give a fine impression upon visitors.

RAILROAD MATTERS.

North Pacific Land Sales.

[Tacoma Ledger.]

Mr. J. H. Houghton, land agent of the Northern Pacific R. R. Co. for the Pend d'Oreille, Cascade and Pacific divisions, states the amount of sales for the month of May, 1881, on the first named division, at $50,998.06, against $12,034.95 for the corresponding period of last year. These figures show the rapid increase of settlement in eastern Washington. Sales on the Pend d'Oreille division began November 26th, 1879, and up to the 20th of May had reached an aggregate of $731,323.95. The means for building this division were provided independently of and long prior to the syndicate loan of forty millions. A mortgage was created providing for the issuance of construction bonds to the amount of $4,550,[illegible], receivable at par in payment for the lands. About $800,000 of these bonds have been received in payment for lands and retired, and the residue of this portion of the grant amounts to about 5,000,000 acres. It is estimated that fully one-half of this remainder can readily be sold within the next five years for $2.50 per acre, and that the entire grant of this division will realize about $9,000,000. Of the lands on the Pacific division more have been sold during May of this year, than in any month for three years past—chiefly to settlers along the Cowlitz river, in Lewis and Cowlitz counties.

Nevada and Oregon Railroad.

[Ashland (Oregon) Tidings.]

Hon. J. S. Herrin tells us that his son in San Francisco, W. F. Herrin, met Col. Moore, one of the chief managers of the Nevada and Oregon railroad enterprise, a short time since. Col. Moore said that some New York capitalists were much interested in the projected road, and that if a practical route could be established from the Oregon line across to the coast at Port Orford, they would furnish sixty percent of the money required to build the road. He said further that he intended to make a personal examination of the proposed route this summer, entering Rogue river somewhere about the Meadows, following the river down until the rough, [illegible] is approached, and then striking off across the dividing ridges to Port Orford. Mr. Herrin, of San Francisco, who is much interested in the scheme, and has talked with a number of railroad men about it, reports that he and [illegible] that this projected line of railroad offers the best field for enterprise and capital of the [illegible] of new railroads on this coast, though [illegible] occupy a field free from competition.

The Northern Pacific in Montana.

[Helena (Montana) Herald, June [illegible]]

The Northern Pacific surveys are progressing with unrelaxed energy, and from the large number of engineer parties now in the field in Montana we presume the line through the entire length of the territory will be finally determined and located before the end of summer. The Carloweth party, traversing the main divide by the Mullen pass and Helena, is now east of the city, encamped only about a mile distant from the corporate limits. Should the route by Helena be adopted, as at present seems all preferred, a very considerable force of workmen will be employed on the main range tunnel, about three-fourths of a mile in length, the coming fall. The diamond drill and all the modern appliances of machinery will be brought into use for expeditious and economical work. The whole outfit of implements and machinery for the tunnel will probably be delivered within the next forty days at Benton, from which point they are expected to be delivered to their destination early in August.

SALEM NOTES.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE OREGONIAN.]

SALEM, July 2, 1881.

Senator Grover paid a friendly visit to the state departments this morning. He is looking unusually well.

Joseph Buchtel, sheriff of Multnomah county, was in the city this morning and favored the state department with a call.

The Salem business houses will close at 10 o'clock A. M. on Monday next, as will also the state department and all public offices.

The Salem fire department and the capital guards will turn out in full and join in the parade on the Fair grounds on Monday next.

Hon. John W. Crawford, mayor of the city, has returned from his trip to the eastern states, and has since [illegible] the municipal [illegible].

[illegible] will hold lay services at the Episcopal church each Sunday morning until arrangements are made to supply the now vacant rectorship.

The election of chief and assistant chief engineers of the Salem Fire Department will take place on Monday next, from 8 to 11 A. M. James [illegible], of Tiger Engine Co. No. 2, being the only candidate for chief, and August [illegible] Strong, of [illegible] Hook & Ladder Co. No. 1, the only candidate for assistant, the contest will prove anything but a spirited one.

The news of President Garfield's assassination reached here about 9 o'clock A. M. and created an intense feeling of interest. Little knots of men are gathering along the streets and discussing the situation in a suppressed tone of voice, indicative of deep sorrow. Later intelligence announcing that his injuries were considered less fatal, relieved the extreme tension of the public mind to a very great extent.

A son of Philip H. Burnett is visiting the family of Geo. H. Burnett, in this city. Mr. Burnett was a member and chairman of the judiciary committee of the legislature in [illegible] which met at the house of Mr. Hathaway at the Willamette Falls, in [illegible] 1844, and took a very important part in the early history of our state. He left here in 1848 and settled in California, where he is to-day an honored [illegible] of Oakland, being quite hale and hearty for a man of eighty-four years of age.

The contest for the elegant silver fire trumpet, offered as a prize by manager Stechhan to the company selling the largest number of tickets for "Fun on the Bristol," is creating a lively contest. Tiger Engine Co. No. 2 has joined issue with the Aerial Hook & Ladder Co. No. 1, and will if they win it, turn it over to the latter organization. The newly elected board of fire delegates will meet for organization on Tuesday evening next, provided the delegates-elect receive their certificates of election in time.

A man named Ryan residing near Independence was thrown from his wagon in South Salem this morning and received some severe injuries, including the dislocation of his shoulder and a fracture of his nose. It is feared he has received internal injuries as well. Pete Emerson appeared on the street feeling badly shaken up after his marvelous escape on Thursday last. Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Patterson invited in a few friends last evening who were received by Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Gray. Among those invited we noticed Hon. E. P. McCornack, James Young, Chas. B. Moores, Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Hodgkin, Miss Fannie Odeneal, Mrs. M. [illegible] Lowes-dale, Miss Sallie Chamberlain, Miss Jennie Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Burnett and others. Social converse, whist and choice refreshments made the hours pass pleasantly. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson leaving nothing undone which would add to the enjoyment of their guests. McKern, the Turner robber, having plead guilty to the separate charges, was sentenced by His Hon. Judge Boise to fifteen years' imprisonment in the Oregon Penitentiary.
